

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. SOME ACCOUNT

L O N D O N.

AT the period when a portion of the original inhabitants of this island felt an impulse towards civilization; and were inclined to withdraw from their native dens in the depth of woods, in order to form society; they cleared a spot in the midst of their forests, and placed towns, similar to those which the discoverers of the new world found occupied by the savages of America;* and similar, though probably inferior, to those of the more polished race of Negroes.† The Britons soon found the danger of living in families separated and undefended. They sought for security in places surrounded with woods or morasses, and added to the natural strength by forming ramparts and sinking fosses.* But they preferred spots fortified by nature; and made artificial works only where nature shewed herself deficient. Within such precincts they formed their towns: their buildings were most mean and simple, covered with reeds or sticks like American wigwams, or like modern hovels of the peasants of Lochaber, or the cabins of the Irish commonalty, to this moment as rude as those of the British aborigines. To these precincts the Britons resorted with their cattle, their wives and children,† which they left thus protected, while they sallied out to war, or to the employments of the chase: for their cloathing was the skins of beasts, and their food the flesh, with the addition of milk, and farinaceous diet. The Britons soon became acquainted with one great use of the cow, notwithstanding they remained ignorant of the art of making cheese till the arrival of the Romans. Agriculture was soon introduced among those who earliest formed towns or communities: possibly by strangers who visited them from the continent. They cleared the land in the neighborhood of their dwellings, they sowed corn, they reaped and deposited it in granaries under-ground, as the Scythians practise to this very day; but the latter leave it in the grain, our predecessors lodged it in the ear, out of which they picked the grains as they wanted them, and, ignorant of mills, at first bruised, and then made them into a coarse bread.* The same nation who taught them the art of agriculture, first introduced a change of dress. From the Gauls of the continent, they received the first cloth; the dress called the Bracha, a coarse woollen manufacture. But probably it was long before they learned the use of the loom, or became their own manufacturers. This intercourse layed the foundation of commerce, which in early times extended no farther than to our maritime places. They first received the rudiments of civilization, while the more remote remained, in proportion to their distance, more and more savage, or in a state of nature. In the same degree as the neighboring Gauls became acquainted with the arts, they communicated them to the nearest British colonists; who, derived from the same stock, and retaining the same language and manners, were more capable and willing to receive any instructions offered by a congenerous people. For this reason Cantium, the modern Kent, and probably the country for some way up the Thames, was, as Cæsar informs us, the most civilized of any part of Britain; the inhabitants differing very little in their manner of life from the Gauls. It was from the merchants who frequented our ports, that he received the first intelligence of the nature of our country, which induced him to undertake its invasion, and which in after-times layed the foundation of its conquest by the Romans.

LONDON. THERE is not the least reason to doubt but that London existed at that period, and was a place of much resort. It stood in such a situation as the Britons would select, according to the rule they established. An immense forest originally extended to the river-side, and even as late as the reign of Henry II. covered the northern neighborhood of the city, and was filled with various species of beasts of chace.* It was defended naturally by fosses; one formed by the creek which ran along Fleet-ditch; the other, afterwards known by that of Walbrook. The south side was guarded by the Thames. The north they might think sufficiently protected by the adjacent forest.

LONDON STONE.

NEAR St. Swithin's church is a remnant of antiquity, which some have supposed to have been British; a stone, which might have formed a part of a Druidical circle, or some other object of the antient religion. Others have conjectured it to have been a military stone, and to have served as a standard from which they began to compute their miles, as it is placed near the center of the Roman precincts. This seems very reasonable, as the distances from the neighboring places coincide very exactly. At all times it has been preserved with great care, placed deep in the ground, and strongly fastened with bars of iron. It seems preserved like the Palladium of the city. It is at present cased like a relique, within free-stone, with a hole left in the middle, which discovers the original. Certainly superstitious respect has been paid to it; for when the notorious rebel Jack Cade passed by it, after he had forced his way into the city, he struck his sword on London stone, saying, "Now is Mortimer lord of this citie;"* as if that had been a customary ceremony of taking possession.

* Fitzstephen's Descr. London, 26.

THERE is every reason to suppose that the Romans possessed themselves of London in the reign of Claudius; under whom Aulus Plautius took Camulodunum, the present Colchester, and planted there a colony, consisting of veterans of the fourteenth legion, about a hundred and five years after the first invasion of our island by Cæsar. This was the first footing the Romans had in Britain. It seems certain that London and Verulam were taken possession of about the same time ; but the latter claims the honor of being of a far earlier date, more opulent, populous, and a royal seat before the conquest of Britain. Ca-mulodunum was made a Colonia, or a place governed entirely by Roman laws and customs ; Verulamium, a Municipium, in which the natives were honored with the privileges of Roman citizens, and enjoyed their own laws and constitutions ; and Londinium, only a Præfectura ; the inhabitants, a mixture of Romans and Britons, being suffered to enjoy no more than the name of citizens of Rome, were governed by Præfects sent annually from thence, without having either their own laws or magistrates. It was even then of such concourse, and such vast trade, that the wise conquerors did not think fit to trust the inhabitants with the same privileges as other places, of which they had less reason to be jealous.

THERE is no mention of this important place, till the reign of Nero ; when Tacitus speaks of it as not having been distinguished as a colony, but famous for its great concourse of merchants, and its vast commerce : this indicates, at least, that London had been at that time of some antiquity as a trading town, and founded long before the reign of that emperor. The exports from hence were cattle, hides, and corn ; dogs made a small article ; and, let me add, that slaves were a considerable object. Our internal parts were on a level with the African slave coasts; and wars among the petty monarchs were promoted for the sake of a traffic now * so strongly controverted.†

The earliest imports were salt, earthen ware, and works in brass, polished bits of bones emulating ivory, horse-collars, toys of amber, and glasses, and other articles of the same material.‡ We need not insist on the commerce of this period, for there was a great trade carried on with the Gauls in the days of Cæsar; that celebrated invader assigning, as his reason for attempting this island, the vast supplies which it furnished to his Gaulish enemies, § and which interrupted his conquests on the continent.

IMPORTS.

THE first mention of London was occasioned by a calamity, in the year 61, in the reign of Nero, which nearly occasioned the extinction of the Roman power in Britain. The heroine Boadicea, indignant at the personal insult offered to her and her family, and the cruelties of the conquerors to the unhappy Britons, made a sudden revolt, and destroyed Camulodunum, after putting all the colonists to the sword. Tacitus gives us the prediction of the ruin of that city, with all the majesty of historical superstition. “ Nulla pa-

DESTROYED
 BY THE BRITONS.

THE Roman general Paulinus Suetonius, on this news, suddenly marched across the kingdom, from his conquests in North Wales, to London; which, finding himself unequal to defend with his small army, he evacuated to the fury of the enemy, after reinforcing his troops with all the natives who were fit to serve. Neither the tears or prayers of the inhabitants could prevail on him to give them his protection. The enraged Boadicea destroyed all who continued behind. Verulamium met with the same fate. In all the three places seventy thousand Romans and British allies perished.†

ENLARGED
 BY THE ROMANS.

WHEN the Romans became masters of London, they enlarged the precincts, and altered their form. It extended in length from Ludgate-hill to a spot a little beyond the Tower. The breadth

* Tac. Annales, lib. xiv. c. 32.

† Ib. lib. xiv. c. 33.

was not half equal to the length, and at each end it became considerably narrower. Mr. Maitland suspects that the walls were not built till a very late period of the empire, and that it was an open town ; because the city happened to be surprized, in the days of Dioclesian and Maximilian, by a party of banditti, who were cut off by a band of Roman soldiers, who fortunately had, at the very time they were engaged in the plunder, come up the river in a fog. The time in which the wall was built is very uncertain. Some ascribe the work to Constantine the Great. Maitland, to Theodosius, governor of Britain in 369 ; of whom we know no more, than that, after he had cleared the country of the barbarians, he redressed grievances, strengthened the garrisons, and repaired the cities and forts * which had been damaged. If London was among those, it certainly implies a prior fortification. Possibly their founder might have been Constantine, as numbers of coins of his mother Helena have been discovered under them, placed there by him in compliment to her. This conjecture we may strengthen by saying, that in honor of this empress, the city received from her the title of Augusta ; which for some time superseded the antient one of Londinium. Long before this period, it was fully romanized, and the customs, manners, buildings, and arts of the conqueror were adopted. The commerce of the empire flowed in regularly; came in a direct channel from the several parts then known, not as in the earlier days (when described by Strabo) by the intervention of other nations; for till the settlement of the Roman conquest, nothing could come immediately from Italy.

EXTENT AND FORM.

THE antient course of the walls was as follows : —It began with a fort near the present site of the Tower, was continued along the Minories, and the back of Houndsditch, across Bishopsgate-street, in a strait line by London-wall to Cripplegate; then returned southward by Crowder's Well Alley, (where several remnants of lofty towers were lately to be seen) to Aldersgate; thence along the back of Bull-and-Mouth-street to Newgate, and again along the back of the houses in the Old Bailey to Ludgate; soon after which it probably finished with another fort, where the house, late the King's Printing House, in Black Friars, now stands: from hence another wall ran near the river-side, along Thames-street, quite to the fort on the eastern extremity. In another place I shall have occasion to mention that the river at present is moved considerably more to the south, than it was in the times in question.

THAT the Romans had a fort on the spot at present occupied by the Tower, is now past doubt, since the discovery of a silver ingot, and three golden coins; one of the emperor Honorius, the others of Arcadius. These were found in 1777, in digging for the foundation of a new office for the Board of Ordnance, through the foundation of certain antient buildings, beneath which they were met with on the natural ground. The ingot was in form of a double wedge, four inches long, and two and three quarters broad in the broadest part, and three-eighths of an inch thick in the middle; it appears to have been cast first, and then beaten into form by a hammer; its weight is ten ounces eight grains of the troy pound. In the middle is struck, in Roman letters,

This is supposed to have come from the royal mint, then at Constantinople, and intended to ascertain the purity of the silver coin, that might have been sent over with it, Honorius reigning over the empire of the west, as Arcadius did over that of the east. This was at the expiration of the Roman power in Britain. The coins were supposed to have been part of the money sent to pay the last legion which was ever sent to the assistance of the Britons. The Tower was the treasury in which the public money was deposited. The coins are in fine preservation. On the reverse is an armed man treading on a captive with the legend VICTORIA AVGGG, and at the bottom CONOB. The first alludes to the success of the legion against the Picts and Scots. CONOB. may intend Constantinopoli obsignata.*

TOWERS.

THE walls were three miles a hundred and sixty-five feet in circumference, guarded at proper distances, on the land side, with fifteen lofty towers; some of them were remaining within these few years, and possibly may be so still. Maitland mentions one, twenty-six feet high, near Gravel-lane, on the west side of Houndsditch; another, about eighty paces south-east towards Aldgate; and the bases of another, supporting a modern house, at the lower end of the street called the Vineyard, south of Aldgate. But since his publication, they have been demolished, so that there is not a trace of them left. The walls, when perfect, are supposed to have been twenty-two feet high, the towers forty. These, with the remnants of the wall, proved the structure to be Roman, by the tiles and disposition of the masonry. London-wall, near Moorfields, is now the most entire part left of that antient precinct.

A SPECULA. I MUST not omit the Barbican, the Specula or

roads, were four. The Prætorian way, the Saxon Watling-street, passed under one, on the site of the late Newgate; vestiges having been discovered of the road in digging above Holborn-bridge: it turned down to Dow-gate, or more properly Dwr-gate or Water-gate, where there was a Trajectus or Ferry, to join it to the Watling-street, which was continued to Dover. The Ermin-street passed under Cripplegate; and a vicinal way went under Aldgate, by Bethnal Green, towards Oldford, a pass over the river Lee to Duroleiton, the modern Leyton, in Essex.

IN most parts of antient London, Roman antiquities have been found, whenever it has been thought necessary to dig to any considerable depth. Beneath the old Saint Mary le Bow were found the walls, windows, and pavement of a Roman Temple; and not far from it, eighteen feet deep in adventitious soil, was the Roman causeway. The great elevation of the present ground above its former state, will be taken notice of in another place.

ANTIQUITIES.

IN digging the foundation for rebuilding St. Paul's, was found a vast cœmetery: first lay the Saxons, in graves lined with masses of chalk, or in coffins of hollowed stones ; beneath them had been the bodies of the Britons, placed in rows. Abundance of ivory and boxen pins, about six inches long, marked where the latter had been deposited. These are supposed to have fastened the shrouds in which the bodies were wrapped.* These perishing, left the pins entire. In the same row, but deeper, were Roman urns intermixed, lamps, lacrymatories ; fragments of sacrificial vessels were also discovered, in digging towards the north-east corner ; and in 1675, not far from the east corner, at a considerable depth, beneath some flinty pavement, were found numbers of vessels of earthen ware, and of glass, of most exquisite colors and beauty, some inscribed with the names of deities, heroes, or men of rank. Others ornamented with a variety of figures in bas relief, of animals and of rose-trees. Tesserulae of jasper, porphyry, or marble, such as form the pavement we so often see, were also discovered. Also glass beads and rings, large pins of ivory and bone, tusks of boars, and horns of deer sawn through. Also coins of different emperors, among them some of Constantine ; which at once destroys the conjecture of Mr. Maitland, who supposes that this collection was flung together at the sacking of London by our injured Boadicea.

* Parentalia, p. 266.

In 1711, another cœmetary was discovered, in Camomile-street, adjoining to Bishopsgate. It lay beneath a handsome tessellated pavement, and contained numbers of urns filled with ashes and cinders of burnt bones; with them were beads, rings, a lacrymatory, a fibula, and a coin of Antoninus.

In Spittlefields was another Roman burying-IN SPITTLE-FIELDS. place, of which many curious particulars are mentioned by old Stow, in p. 323 of his Survey of London: and Camden gives a brief account of another, discovered in Goodman's fields. Among the antiquities found in Spittlefields, was a great ossuary made of glass, encompassed with five parallel circles, and containing a gallon and a half: it had a handle, a very short neck, and wide mouth of a whiter metal. This was presented to Sir Christopher Wren, who lodged it in the Museum of the Royal Society.* I point out these as means of discovering the antient Roman precincts of the city. The cœmeteries must have been without the walls: it being a wise and express law of the XII Tables, that no one should be buried within the walls. I cannot think that the urns found near St. Paul's were funereal; if they were so, the Roman walls must have been much farther to the east than they are generally supposed to have been placed ; which by no means appears to have been the fact.

I WILL only mention one other antiquity found here : very few indeed have been preserved, out of the multitude which must have been discovered in a place of such importance, and the capital of the Roman empire in Britain. That which I shall speak of is a sepulchral monument, in memory of Vivius Marcianus, (a Roman soldier of the second legion, quartered here,) erected by his wife Januaria Matrina. It represents him as a British soldier, probably of the Cohors Britonum, dressed and armed after the manner of the country, with long hair, a short lower garment fastened round the waist by a girdle and fibula, a long Sagum or plaid flung over his breast and one arm, ready to be cast off in time of action, naked legs, and in his right hand a sword of vast length, like the claymore of the later Highlanders ; the point is represented resting on the ground : in his left hand is a short instrument, with the end seemingly broken off. This sculpture was found in digging among the ruins, after the fire in 1666, in the vallum of the Prætorian camp near Ludgate. The soldiers were always buried in the Vallum ; the citizens in the Pomærium,* without the gates. It is very differently and faultily represented by Mr. Gale. The hair in his figure is short, the sword also short, and held with the left hand across his body, the instrument is placed in the left hand, and resembles an exact Baton: the dress also differs. I give the preference to the figure given by Mr. Horsely,* which he corrected after that given by Dr. Prideaux, from the Arundelian marbles. But Mr. Horsely fairly confesses that the representation is far more elegant than in the mutilated original.

* Parentalia, p. 266.—The Pomærium was a space on the outside of fortified towns, on which all buildings were prohibited.

AFTER the Romans deserted Britain, a new and fierce race succeeded. The warlike Saxons, under their leaders Hengest and Horsa, landed in 448, at Upwines fleot, the present Ebbsflete, in the isle of Thanet. The Britons remained masters of London at least nine years after that event; for, receiving a defeat in 457, at Creccanford, (Crayford) they evacuated Kent, and fled with great fear to the capital.† By the year 604, it seems to have recovered from the ravages of the invaders. It became the chief town of the kingdom of Essex. Sebert was the first Christian king; and his maternal uncle Ethelbert, king of Kent, founded here a church dedicated to St. Paul. At this time Bede informs us that it was an emporium of a vast number of nations, who resorted thither by sea and by land.

IN the reign of that great prince ALFRED, London, or, to use the Saxon name, Lundenburg, was made by him the capital of all England. In consequence of a vow he had made, he sent Sighelm, bishop of Sherbourn, first to Rome, and from thence to India, with alms to the Christians of the town of St. Thomas, now called Bekkeri, or Meliapour: who returned with various rich gems, some of which were to be seen in the church of Sherbourn, in the days of William of Malmesbury.* It must not be omitted that he was the first who, from this island, had any commerce with that distant country. Our commerce by sea, even in the next century, was not very extensive, the wise monarch Athelstan being obliged, for the encouragement of navigation, to promise patents of gentility to every merchant, who should, on his own bottom, make three voyages to the Mediterranean.

NORMAN CONQUEST.

THE succeeding ravages of the Danes reduced London, and its commerce, to a low ebb: yet it seems in some measure to have recovered before the Conquest. We are wonderfully in the dark respecting the state of its government, both in the Saxon period, and at that of the Conquest: in respect to the former, we know no more than that it was governed by a Portreeve or Portgrave, or guardian of the port; and this we learn from the concise charter granted to the city by William the Conqueror, in which he salutes William the bishop, and Godfrey the Portreeve, and all the burgesses. “ William kyng gret William “ Bisceop, and Gosfregth Porterefan, and ealle “ tha Burhwarn binnen London, Frencisce and “ Englisce frendlice. And ic kithe eow thaet ic “ wille thaet get ben eallra theera laga weorde the “ git weeran on Eadwerdes daege kynges. And ic “ wille theet aelc child beo his faeder yrf nume “ after his faeder daege. And ic nelle ge wolian “ thaet aenig man eow eanig wrang beode. God “ eow ge healde.”* It is probable that the bishop of London for the time being, and the Portgrave, were united in the government, for in the Saxon charters they are mentioned together: in the time of Edward the Confessor, Alfwar the bishop, and Wolfgar my Portgrave. William bishop, and Saerman my Portgrave.

LONDON certainly could not have been in the very low condition, which some writers represent, at the time of the Conquest. It ventured to sally out on the Conqueror, but without success. It fell more by internal faction, than its own weakness; yet there was strength enough left, to make William think proper to secure its allegiance, by building that strong fortress the Tower. In seventy years from that event, an historian* then living pretends, that London mustered sixty thousand foot, and twenty thousand horse. If this is any thing near the truth, is it possible but that London must have been very powerful at the time of the Conquest? for the period between that event and the reign of Stephen, was not well calculated for a great increase of population. I rather concur with those who think that the muster must have been of the militia of the neighboring counties, and London the place of rendezvous. A writer† of that period, and at the very time resident in the capital, with more appearance of truth, makes the number of inhabitants only forty thousand.

DURING the time of the Conqueror, and till the reign of Richard I. the name of the civil governor continued the same. That monarch, to support the madness of the crusade, received from the citizens a large sum of money; and in return, permitted them to chuse annually two officers, under the name of bailiffs, or sheriffs; who were to supersede the former. The names of the two first upon record are Wolgarius, and Geffry de Magnum.

IN the next reign was added the office of CHANGED TO
A MAYOR. mayor, a title borrowed from the Norman Maire, as well as the office. Henry Fitzalwyn was the first elected to that trust. He had been before mayor, but only by the nomination of his prince.

IN the reign of Henry III. after the citizens had suffered many oppressions, he restored a form of government, and appointed twenty-four citizens to share the power. In his son's reign, we find the city divided into twenty-four wards; the supreme magistrate of which was named Alderman, an exceedingly antient Saxon title. Aelder-man, a ALDERMEN. man advanced in years, and accordingly supposed to be of superior wisdom and gravity. In the time of Edgar, the office was among the first in the kingdom. Aikwyn, ancestor to the first mayor, was alderman of all England; what the duties of his office were, does not appear.

HE must be a Briareus in literature, who would dare to attempt a history of our capital, on the great, the liberal, the elegant plan which it merits. I, a puny adventurer, animated with a mind incapable of admitting a vacant hour; restless when unemployed in the rural scenes to which my fortunate lot has destined me, must catch and enjoy the idea of the minute. In the pursuit of my plan, I wish to give a slight view of the shores I am about to launch from: the account must be brief and confined; limited to what I shall say of their antient state, to the period bounded by the REVOLUTION; intermixed with the greater events, which have happened in nearer days.

SITUATION. THE choice of the situation of this great city was most judicious. It is on a gravelly soil; and on a declivity sloping down to the borders of a magnificent river. The slope is evident in every part of the antient city, and of the vast modern buildings. The antient city was defended in front by the river; on the west side by the deep ravine, since known by the name of Fleet-ditch; on the north by morasses; on the east, as I suspect, by another ravine. All the land round Westminster Abbey was a flat fen, which continued beyond Fulham: but a rise commences opposite to it, and forms a magnificent bend above the curvature of the Thames, even to the Tower. The Surry side was in all probability a great expanse of water, a lake, a Llyn, as the Welsh call it; which an ingenious countryman of mine,* not without reason, thinks might have given a name to our capital; Llyn Din, or the city on the lake. This most probably was the original name: and that derived from Llong a ship, and Dis a town, might have been bestowed when the place became a seat of trade, and famous for the 'concourse of shipping. The expanse of water might have filled the space between the rising grounds at Deptford, and those at Clapham; and been bounded to the south by the beautiful Surry Hills. Lambeth Marsh, and the Bankside, evidently were recovered from the water. Along Lambeth are the names of Narrow Walls, or the mounds which served for that purpose; and in Southwark, Bankside again shews the means of converting the antient lake into useful land: even to this day the tract beyond Southwark, and in particular that beyond Bermondsey-street, is so very low, and beneath the level of common tides, that the proprietors are obliged to secure it by embankments.

I BEGIN my account by crossing over the Thames into Surry, which, with Sussex, formed the country of the antient Regni, being part of this island to which the Romans permitted a kingly government, merely to enjoy the insolent boast of having kings as their slaves. The Saxons bestowed on this part their own names of Suthry or Suthrea, from its situation on the southern part of the river. I proceed to my accustomed walk of LAMBETH. In the earlier times it was a manor, possibly a royal one, for the great Hardiknut died here in 1042, in the midst of the jollity of a wedding dinner : and here, without any formality, the usurper Harold is said to have snatched the crown, and placed it on his own head.

• ABOUT the time of Hardiknut's death this place was part of the estate of Goda, wife to Walter earl of Mantes, and Eustace earl of Boulogne ; who presented it to the church of Rochester, but reserved to herself the patronage of the church. It became, in 1197, the property of the see of Canterbury, by an exchange made between Glanville bishop of Rochester, and the archbishop Hubert Walter. Glanville reserved out of the exchange a small piece of land, on which he built a house called Rochester Place, for the reception of the bishops of Rochester, whenever they came to attend parlement. In 1357, John de Shepey built Stangate-stairs, for the convenience of himself and retinue to cross over into Westminster. Fisher and Hilsley were the last bishops who inhabited this palace ; after their deaths it fell into the hands of Henry VIII. who exchanged with Aldrich bishop of Carlisle, for certain houses in the Strand. Its name was changed to that of Carlisle-house.* The small houses built on its

* Ducarel's Lambeth, 72.

site still belong to that see. It had been the design of archbishop Walter, to erect here a college of secular monks, independent of those of Canterbury. It was originally designed, by archbishop Baldwyn, to have been built at Hackington, or St. Stephen's, near that city: but such a jealousy did those holy men conceive at the thought of a rival house so near to their own, that by their interest with the pope the project was layed aside. It was afterwards resumed by Hubert Walter, who thought he could give no offence by erecting the college on this distant manor; but the monks obtained a bull from the pope in their favor, and such humiliating terms were prescribed to the archbishop, that thenceforth he entirely desisted from the design.* The mortifications which the primates met with in the prosecution of it, seem to have first determined them in fixing their residence here. Walter and Langton successively lived at the manor-house of Lambeth. The latter improved it, but the building was afterwards neglected and became ruinous. No pious zeal restored the place, but the madness of priestly pride. Boniface, a wrathful and turbulent primate, elected in 1244, took it into his head to become a visitor of the priory of St. Bartholomew, to which he had no right. The monks met him with reverential respect, but assured him the office did not belong to the bishop. The meek prelate rushed on the sub-prior, knocked him down, kicked, beat, and buffeted him, tore the cope off his back, and stamped on it like one possessed, while his attendants payed the same compliments to all the poor monks. The people, enraged at his unpriestly conduct, would have torn him to pieces; when he retired to Lambeth, and, by way of expiation, rebuilt it with great magnificence.

LOLLARDS
TOWER.

THIS palace was very highly improved by the munificent Henry Chickely, who enjoyed the primacy from 1414 to 1443. I lament to find so worthy a man to have been the founder of a building so reproachful to his memory as the Lollards tower, at the expence of nearly two hundred and eighty pounds. Neither protestants or catholics should omit visiting this tower, the cruel prison of the unhappy followers of Wickliffe. The vast staples and rings, to which they were chained before they were brought to the stake, ought to make protestants bless the hour which freed them from so bloody a period. Catholics may glory, that time has softened their zeal into charity for all sects, and made them blush at these memorials of the misguided zeal of their ancestors.

THIS palace suffered greatly in the civil wars. After those of York and Lancaster, it was restored archbishop Morton. He also built the gateway; in the lower room of which are still to be seen the rings to which the overflowings of the Lollards tower were chained.

AFTER the civil wars of the last century, when FANATICAL FURY. fanaticism was united with political fury, it was found that every building devoted to piety, had suffered more than they had done in all the rage of family contest. The fine works of art, and the sacred memorials of the dead, were, except in a few cases, sacrificed to puritanical barbarism, or to sacrilegious plunder. Lambeth fell to the share of the miscreant regicide Scot. He turned the chapel into a hall, and levelled, for that purpose, the fine monument of archbishop Parker: he pulled down the noble hall, the work of Chickely, and sold the materials for his own profit. Juron, on the Restoration, found the palace of his predecessors a heap of ruins. His piety rebuilt a greater part than could have been expected from the short time he enjoyed the primacy. He restored the great hall on the antient model, when the archbishop with his particular friends sat at the high table: the steward with the servants, who were gentry of the better rank, occupied the table on the right hand side; the almoner, the clergy, and others, that on the left. None but nobility or privy counsellors were admitted to the table of the archbishop. The bishops themselves sat at the almoner's; the other guests at the steward's. All the meat which was not consumed was regularly given to the idle poor, who waited in crowds at the gate. It is not the defect of charity in modern prelates that this custom is disused;* but the happy change in the times. Every one must now eat the bread of his own industry; a much more certain support than the casual bounty of the great, which misfortune often prevented, and left the object a prey to misery and famine. What is styled the luxury of the times, has by no means superseded deeds of alms. Wealth is more equally diffused; but charity is equally great: it passes now through many channels, and makes less noise than when it was poured through fewer streams.

LIBRARY.

THE fine library in this palace was founded by archbishop Bancroft; who died in 1610, and left all his books to his successors, for ever. The succeeding archbishop, Abbot, bequeathed all his books in his great study, marked G. C., in the same unlimited manner.

ON the suppression of episcopacy, this valuable library was preserved by the address of the celebrated Mr. Selden. It seems that archbishop

* A dole, however, consisting of fifteen quartern loaves, nine stone of beef, and five shillings worth of halfpence, is still distributed, in three equal portions weekly, to thirty poor parishioners of Lambeth. Ed.

Bancroft had left his books to his successors, on condition that the immediate successor was to give bond that they should not be embezzled, but delivered entire from one to the other for ever. On failure of this article, they were to go to Chelsea College, in case it was built in six years after his decease. The college never was finished: whether any of Bancroft's successors gave the security does not appear. The books were remaining at Lambeth in 1646, two years after the execution of archbishop Laud; when, probably fearing for their safety in times so inimical to learning, Mr. Selden suggested to the university of Cambridge their right to them; and the whole were delivered into their possession. On the Restoration, archbishop Juxon demanded the return of the library; which was repeated by his successor Sheldon, as founded on the will of the pious founder; and they were restored accordingly. Archbishop Sheldon added a considerable number: and archbishop Tenison augmented it with part of his books.

THAT very worthy prelate archbishop Secker, besides a considerable sum expended in making catalogues to the old registers of the see, left to the library all such books from his own as were not in the former, which comprehended much the largest and most valuable part of his own collection.

ARCHBISHOP Cornwallis bestowed many valuable books in his life-time. And the present archbishop has given a considerable sum for fitting up a proper repository for the valuable collection of manuscripts. The whole number of printed books amounts to twenty-five thousand.

GALLERY. THE other apartments have within these few years received considerable improvements. The great gallery, which is nearly ninety feet long by fifteen feet nine inches broad, has lately had the addition of a bow window, by the* present amiable and worthy primate. An opening has been made towards the river by cutting down a few trees, which admits a most beautiful view of the water, part of the bridge, of the venerable abbey, and of the cathedral of St. Paul. This gallery is filled with portraits of primates or prelates; among others, that of cardinal Pole, the founder of this very room. Over the chimney are the heads of those of the earlier times, such as archbishop Warham, by Holbein; St. Dunstan, and archbishop Chichely: the first imaginary, the last probably taken from painted glass. Among these distinguished characters, Katherine Parr has found a place, and not without just claim; it being reasonable to suppose, but for the death of her tyrant, she would have been devoted to the stake for the favor she bore to the reformed religion. The small oval print in my possession, (without date*) inscribed round the margin "Effigies CATHERINÆ PRINCIPIS ARTHURI UXORIS HENRICO REGI nuptæ," with a wondrous blundering inscription beneath, is assuredly no other than the print of Katherine Parr; and in the rich dress, and in feature, has the strongest resemblance to the Lambeth portrait: and without a single trace of the print among the illustrious heads engraved by Houbraken.

I MUST not omit to mention the two portraits of archbishop Parker, second primate of the protestant religion; one is by Holbein, the other by Richard Lyne, who jointly practised the arts of painting and engraving in the service of this great patron of science.†

In the dining-room is a succession of primates, from the violent and imprudent Laud to the quiet and discreet Cornwallis. The portrait of Laud is admirably painted by Vandyke; Juxon, from a good original which I have seen at Longleat; Tenison, by Simon Dubois; Herring, by Hogarth ; Hutton, by Hudson ; Secker, by Reynolds ; and Cornwallis, by Dance. Here are besides in the gallery, by the last master, portraits of Terrick late bishop of London, and Thomas, late bishop of Winchester : and another of bishop Hoadley, which does honor to the artist, his wife, Sarah Curtis. When I looked into the garden I could not but recall the scene* of the conference between the great, the wise earl of Clarendon, and the unfortunate Laud. Hyde laid before him the resentment of all ranks of people against him for his passionate and ill-mannered treatment even of persons of rank. The primate attended to the honest chancellor with patience, and palliated his faults.† The advice was forgotten, nor was his folly cured till he had involved himself and master in destruction.

LONGEVITY OF A TORTOISE.

A MORE phlegmatic habitant of the garden, enjoyed his situation during many successions to this self-devoted metropolitan. A Tortoise, introduced here in his days (in 1633) lived till the year 1753, the time of archbishop Herring, and possibly might have continued till the present, had it not been killed by the negligence of the gardener. I have been informed that Laud left another at Fulham, when he quitted the see of London, in 1633, which died a natural death some time between the years 1760 and 1770.

IN the vestry is a portrait of *Luther and his wife; the lady appears pregnant. This great reformer left three sons, John, Martin, and Paul.

IN one of the apartments of the palace is a performance that does great honor to the ingenious spouse of a modern dignitary; a copy in needlework of a Madonna and child, after a most capital performance of the Spanish Murillo. There is most admirable grace in the original, which was sold last winter at the price of eight hundred guineas.† It made me lament that this excellent master had wasted so much time on beggars and ragged boys. Beautiful as it is, the copy came improved out of the hand of our skilful countrywoman; a judicious change of color of part of the drapery, has had a most happy effect, and given new excellence to the admired original.‡

* This by no means resembles the usual portraits of the celebrated reformer. Ed.

LAMBETH CHURCH.

CHURCH.

THE parish church of Lambeth is at a small distance from the palace, has a plain tower, and the architecture is of the gothic of the time of Edward IV. It has very little remarkable in it, except the figure of a pedlar and his dog, painted in one of the windows. Tradition says, that the parish is indebted to this man for the bequest of a piece of land, which bears the name of The Pedlar's Acre.

BEFORE I go any farther, let me mention the sad example of fallen majesty in the person of Mary d'Este, the unhappy queen of James II.; who flying with her infant prince from the ruin impending over their house, after crossing the Thames from the abdicated Whitehall, took shelter beneath the antient walls of this church a whole hour, from the rain of the inclement night of December 6th, 1688. Here she waited with aggravated misery, till a common coach, procured from the next inn, arrived, and conveyed

IN this place rest from their labors several of the later primates, without any remarkable monument, except their good works, to preserve them from oblivion; among them is Bancroft, Tenison, Hutton; and in a passage leading to the palace, are the remains of Secker.

HERE likewise was interred the mild, amiable, and polished prelate Cuthbert Tunstal, bishop of Durham, who deprived on account of his attachment to the old religion, by Edward VI. was restored by Mary, and again deprived by Elizabeth: here he found an asylum in the family of archbishop Parker, so highly was he esteemed even by the protestants; here he passed his days with honor and tranquillity, till his death in 1559.

BISHOP
TUNSTAL.

IN the same church are the remains of Thirleby, once bishop of Ely, deprived for the same cause by Elizabeth. By the charity of the above-mentioned great prelate, he found the same protection as his fellow-sufferer Tunstal. To shew the humanity of protestantism, he was indulged with the company of his secretary. He merited every favor. Being joined in commission with Bonner for the degradation of Cranmer, he performed his office with as much tenderness, as his associate did with brutality, and melted into tears over fallen greatness. His body was found in digging the grave for archbishop Cornwallis. His long and venerable beard, and every part, was entire, and of a beautiful whiteness: a slouched hat was under his left arm: his dress that of a pilgrim, as he esteemed himself to be upon earth.

ROBERT
SCOT.

A NEAT bust, with a body in armour, and with artillery, drums, and trophies around, exhibits the military character of Robert Scot, who entered into the service of Gustavus Adolphus, and brought with him two hundred men. He was made muster-master general to that hero: afterwards he went into the service of Denmark; and finally, in 1631, closed his life in that of Charles I. who made him gentleman of his privy chamber, and bestowed on him a pension of six hundred a year. He was of the family of the antient barons of Bawtrie, in North Britain; but his character surpassed his origin.

INVENTOR OF LEATHERN
ARTILLERY.

He was the inventor of leathern artillery, which he introduced into the army of Gustavus, and by that means contributed highly to the glorious victory of Leipsic. Harte, and other historians of that illustrious prince, speak of the invention and its important services, but were either ignorant of the inventor, or chose to suppress his merit.*

* Harte's Hist. Gustavus Adolphus, 2d ed. i. 92. ii. 42.

Tilly himself confesses the superiority of these portable cannons, since his own heavy artillery, admirably served as it was, sunk under the vivacity of the fire of these light pieces.

IN the church-yard is a tomb which no naturalist should neglect visiting; that of old John Tradescant, who, with his son, lived in this parish. The elder was the first person who ever formed a cabinet of curiosities in this kingdom; he is also stated to have been gardener to Charles I. But Parkinson says, "sometimes belonging to the "right honorable lord Robert earl of Salisbury, "lord treasurer of England in his time; and then "unto the right honorable the lord Wotton, at "Canterbury, in Kent; and lastly unto the late "duke of Buckingham."* Both father and son were great travellers; the father is supposed to have visited Russia and most parts of Europe, Turkey, Greece, many of the eastern countries, Egypt, and Barbary; out of which he introduced multitudes of plants and flowers, unknown before in our gardens. His was an age of florists: the chief ornaments of the parterres were owing to his labors. Parkinson continually acknowledges the obligation. Many plants were called after his name: these the Linnæan system has rendered almost obsolete: but the great Swedish naturalist hath made more than reparation, by giving to a genus of plants the title of TRADESCANTIA.* The Museum Tradescantianum, a small book, adorned by the hand of Hollar with the heads of the father and the son, is a proof of their industry. It is a catalogue of their vast collection, not only of the subjects of the three kingdoms of nature, but of artificial rarities from a great variety of countries. The collection of medals, coins, and other antiquities, appears to have been very valuable. Zoology was in their time but in a low state, and credulity far from being extinguished: among the eggs is one supposed to have been of the dragon, and another of the griffin. You might have found here two feathers of the tail of the phœnix, and the claw of the ruck, a bird able to trusse an elephant. Notwithstanding this, the collection was extremely valuable, especially in the vegetable kingdom. In his garden, at his house in South Lambeth, was an amazing arrangement of trees, plants, and flowers. It seems to have been particularly rich in those of the east, and of North America. His merit and assiduity must have been very great; for the eastern traveller must have labored under great difficulties from the barbarity of the country; and North America had in his time been but recently settled.

* Species Plantarum, i. 411.

Yet we find the names of numbers of trees and plants still among the rarer of much later times. To him we are also indebted for the luxury of many fine fruits; for, as Parkinson observed, "The choyssest for goodnesse, and rarest for knowledge, are to be had of my very good friend Master John Tradescante, who hath wonderly labored to obtaine all the rarest fruits hee can heare off in any place of Christendome, Turky, yea, or the whole world."* He lived at a large house in this parish, and had an extensive garden, much visited in his days. After his death, which happened about the year 1652, his collection came into the possession of the famous Elias Ashmole, by virtue of a deed of gift which Mr. Tradescant, junior, had made to him of all his rarities, in true astrological form, being dated December 16, 1657, 5 hor. 30 minutes post merid.† Ashmole also purchased the house, which is still in being; the garden fell to decay. In the year 1749, it was visited by two respectable members of the Royal Society,‡ who found among the ruins some trees and plants, which evidently were introduced here by the industrious founder. The collection of curiosities were removed by Mr. Ashmole, to his Museum at Oxford, where they are carefully preserved. Many very curious articles are to be seen: among others, several original dresses and weapons of the North Americans, in their original state; which may in some period prove serviceable in illustrating their manners and antiquities.

MONUMENT
DESCRIBED.

THE monument of the Tradescants was erected in 1662, by Hester, relict of the younger. It is an altar tomb: at each corner is cut a large tree, seeming to support the slab: at one end is an hydra picking at a bare scull, possibly designed as an emblem of Envy: on the other end are the arms of the family: on one side are ruins, Grecian pillars, and capitals; an obelisk and pyramid, to denote the extent of his travels: and on the opposite, a crocodile, and various shells, expressive of his attention to the study of natural history. Time had greatly injured this monument; but in 1773 it was handsomely restored, at the expence of the parish; and the inscription, which was originally designed for it, engraven on the stone. As it is both singular and historical, I present it to the reader.

Know, stranger, ere thou pass, beneath this stone

The last dy'd in his spring; the other two

 These famous Antiquarians that had been Both gardeners to the Rose and Lily Queen, Transplanted now themselves, sleep here; and when

 And fire shall purge the world, these hence shall rise,
 And change this garden for a paradise.*

 mention that desperate miscreant Guy Faux, or Faure, as an inhabitant of this parish. Dr. Du- called Faux-hall, and was lord of the manor of the same name.† In foreign parts a colonna in- fame would have been erected on the spot: but the site is now occupied by a distillery, and several other buildings.

FROM Lambeth I returned by the water-side, near the end of Westminster-bridge, along a tract once a dreary marsh, and still in parts called Lambeth marsh; about the year 1560, there was not a house on it, from Lambeth palace as far as Southwark. Sir William Dugdale‡ makes frequent mention of the works for securing it, in old times, by embankments or walls as they are styled, to restrain the ravages of the tide. The embankments in Southwark must have been the work of the Romans, otherwise they never could have erected the buildings or made the roads of which such frequent vestiges have been found. Most of this tract is become firm land, and covered with most useful buildings even to the edge of the river. In a street called Narrow Wall (from one of the antient embankments) is Mrs. Coade's manufactory of artificial stone. Her repository consists of several very large rooms filled with every ornament which can be used in architecture. The statue, the vase, the urn, the rich chimney-piece, and, in a few words, every thing which could be produced out of natural stone or marble by the most elegant chissel, is here to be obtained at an easy rate. Proof has been made of its durable quality. A beautiful font, the ornament of Debden church in Essex, formed of this material on a most admirable antique model, was given to it by the liberality of Richard Muilman Trench Chiswell, esq; and is the admiration of every person of taste.

WINES;

NOTWITHSTANDING the climate of Great Britain has, at lest of late years, been unfavorable to the production of wines: yet, in the year 1635, we began to make some from the raisins or dried grapes of Spain and Portugal. Francis Chamberlayne made the attempt, and obtained a patent for fourteen years, in which it is alleged that his wines would keep good during several years, and even in a voyage under the very line.* The art was most successfully revived, several years ago, by Mark Beaufoy, and the foreign wines most admirably mimicked. Such is the prodigality and luxury of the age, that the demand for many sorts exceeds in a great degree the produce of the native vineyards. We have skilful fabricators, who kindly supply our wants. It has been estimated, that half of the port, and five-sixths of the white wines consumed in our capital, have been the produce of our home wine-presses. The product of duty to the state from a single house, was in one year, from July 5th, 1785, to July 5th, 1786, not less than 7,363*l.* 9*s.* 8½*d.* The genial banks of the Thames opposite to our capital, yield almost every species of white wine; and, by a wondrous magic, Messrs. Beaufoy pour forth the materials for the rich Frontignac to the more elegant tables; the Madeira, the Calcarella, and the Lisbon, into every part of the kingdom.

THIS great work, and that for making vinegar, are at a small distance from Mrs. Coade's. I can scarcely say how much I was struck with the extent of the undertaking. There is a magnificence of business, in this ocean of sweets and sour, that cannot fail exciting the greatest admiration: whether we consider the number of vessels, or their size. The boasted ton at Heydelberg does not surpass them. On first entering the yard, two rise before you, covered at the top with a thatched dome; between them is a circular turret, including a winding staircase, which brings you to their summits, which are above twenty-four feet in diameter. One of these conservatories is full of sweet wine, and contains fifty-eight thousand one hundred and nine gallons; or eighteen hundred and fifteen barrels of Winchester measure. Its superb associate is full of vinegar, to the amount of fifty-six thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine gallons, or seventeen hundred and seventy-four barrels, of the same standard as the former. The famous German vessel yields even to the last by the quantity of forty barrels.*

BESIDES these, is an avenue of lesser vessels, which hold from thirty-two thousand five hundred, to sixteen thousand nine hundred and seventy-four gallons each. After quitting this Brobdignagian scene, we pass to the acres covered with common barrels: we cannot diminish our ideas so suddenly, but at first we imagined we could quaff them off as easily as Gulliver did the little hogsheads of the kingdom of Lilliput.

THIS ground, so profitable to the proprietors, and so productive of revenue to the state, was in my memory the scene of low dissipation. Here stood Cuper's Garden, once noted for its fireworks, and for the great resort of the profligate of both sexes. This place was ornamented with several of the mutilated statues belonging to Thomas earl of Arundel, which had been for that purpose begged from his lordship by one Boyder Cuper, a gardener in the family.* The more valuable of them were bought by lord Lemster, father of the first earl of Pomfret, and presented by the earl's widow to the university of Oxford. These grounds were then rented by lord Arundel. On the pulling down of Arundel-house, to make way for the street of that name, these, and several others of the damaged part of the collection, were removed to this place. Numbers were left on the ground, near the river-side, and overwhelmed with the rubbish brought from the foundation of the new church of St. Paul's. These in after-times were discovered, dug up, and conveyed to the seat of the duke of Norfolk, at Worksop manor. Injured as they are, they appear, from the etchings given by Doctor Ducarel, to have had great merit.

GREAT TIM-BER-YARDS.

THE great timber-yards, beneath which these antiquities were found, are very well worthy of a visit. One would fear that the forests of Norway and the Baltic would be exhausted, to supply the want of our overgrown capital, were we not assured, that the resources will successively be increasing equal to the demand of succeeding ages.

DISTILLERY.

IN this parish are the vast distilleries, till of late the property of Sir Joseph Mawbey. There are seldom less than two thousand hogs constantly grunting at this place: which are kept entirely on the grains. I lament to see the maxim of private vices being public benefits so strongly exemplified in the produce of the duty on this Stygian liquor. From July 5th, 1785, to July 5th, 1786, it yielded 450,000*l*.* And I have been told of a single distiller who contributed to that sum 54,000*l*.

ST. GEORGE'S
FIELDS.

To the south are St. George's Fields, now the wonder of foreigners approaching our capital, through avenues of lamps, and by a road of magnificent breadth and goodness. A foreign ambassador, who happened to make his entry at night,

* For the year ending January 12th, 1812, the duty on British spirits amounted to 1,713,731*l*. 5*s*. 8*d*.; that on sweets and mead, to 23,760*l*. 10*s*. 3*d*. ED.

imagining that these illuminations* were in honor of his arrival, modestly observed, they were more than he could have expected. On this spot have been found remains of tessellated pavements, coins, and an urn full of bones,† possibly the site of a summer camp of the Romans; as the place was too wet for a residentiary station. The neighboring marsh of Lambeth was in the last century overflowed with water: but St. George's Fields might, owing to their distance from the river, admit of a temporary encampment.

Lying-in Hospital. This is not instituted merely for the honest matron, who can depose her burthen with the consciousness of lawful love, but also for the unhappy wretches whom some villain, in the unguarded moment, hath seduced, and then left a prey to desertion of friends, poverty, want, and guilt. Least such "may be driven to despair by such complicated misery, and be tempted to destroy themselves, and murder their infants,"‡ here was founded, in 1765, this humane preventative The Westminster New Lying-in Hospital. To obviate all objection to its being an encouragement to vice, no one is taken in a second time: but this most excellent charity is open to the worthy distressed matron as often as necessity requires. None are rejected who have friends to recommend them. And of both descriptions upwards of four thousand have experienced its salutary effects.

ASYLUM, OR HOUSE OF REFUGE.

FARTHER on is another institution of a most heavenly nature, calculated to save from perdition of soul and body, the brighter part of the creation: such on whom Providence hath bestowed angelic faces and elegant forms, designed as blessings to mankind, but too often debased to the vilest uses. The hazard that these innocents constantly are liable to, from a thousand temptations, from poverty, from death of parents, from the diabolical procuress, and often from the stupendous wickedness of parents themselves, who have been known to sell their beauteous girls for the purpose of prostitution, induced a worthy band to found, in the year 1758, the Asylum, or House of Refuge. Long may it flourish, and eternal be the reward of those into whose minds so amiable a conception may have entered!

FOR the salvation of those unhappy beings who had the ill fortune to lose the benefits of this divine institution, at a small distance is the Magdalen Hospital, for the reception of the penitent prostitutes. To save from vice is one great merit. To reclaim and restore to the dignity of honest rank in life is certainly not less meritorious. The joy at the return of one sinner to repentance, is esteemed by the highest authority worthy of the heavenly host. That ecstasy, I trust, this institution has often occasioned. Since its foundation, in the same year with the former, to December 25th, 1786, not fewer than 2,471 have been admitted. Of these (it is not to be wondered that long and evil habits are often incurable), 300 have been discharged, uneasy under constraint; 45 proved lunatics, and afflicted with incurable fits; 60 have died; 52 never returned from hospitals they were sent to; 338 discharged for faults and irregularities.—How to be dreaded is the entrance into the bounds of vice, since the retreat from its paths is so difficult!—Finally, 1608 prodigals have been returned to their rejoicing parents, or placed in reputable services, or to honest trades, banes to idleness, and securities against a future relapse.*

* Mr. Higmore, in his History of the public charities of London, a work so gratifying to the philanthropist, and which manifests so strongly the charitable disposition of the British nation, states, that for fifty-one years to the close of 1807, the number admitted amounted to 3,865: of these, 2,532 had been reconciled to their friends, or placed in creditable situations; 573 discharged at their

EQUESTRIAN
THEATRES.

IN this neighborhood are two theatres of innocent recreation, (in which every government should indulge its subjects, as preservations from worse employs, and as relaxations from the cares of life) of a nature unknown to every other part of Europe; the British Hippodromes, belonging to Messrs. Astley and Hughes, where the wonderful sagacity of that most useful animal the horse is fully evinced. While we admire its admirable docility and apprehension, we cannot less admire the powers of the riders, and the graceful attitudes the human frame is capable of receiving. But there is another species of amusement, usually reckoned of a despicable kind, yet, ever since I read Doctor Delaney's thoughts* on the subject, I have looked on the art of tumbling with admiration. It shews us how fearfully and wonderfully we are made. What infinite misfortunes would befall us, (which almost every step is liable to) were it not for that wise construction of parts, that pliability of limb, which, unperceived by us, own request, and 506 for improper behaviour; 194 died, or became lunatics. The result of an inquiry respecting the fate of 246 discharged between May 1806, and May 1790, proved, that 157 were restored to credit, 74 relapsed into their former vicious habits, 5 had died or were insane;—the situation of the remaining 10 was unknown. protects in every contrived motion, or accidental slip, from the most dire and disabling calamities !

THE borough of Southwark joins the parish of Lambeth on the east, and consists of the parishes of St. Olave's, St. Saviour's, St. George's, and St. Thomas's. BOROUGH OF SOUTHWARK, OR SUTH-WARK.

It was called by the Saxons, Suthwerke, or the South work, in respect to some fort or fortification bearing that aspect from London. It was also called the Borough, or Burg, probably for the same reason. It was long independent of the city of London: but, in consideration of the inconveniences arising from the escape of malefactors from the great capital into this place, it was, in 1327, granted by Edward III. to the city, on the payment of ten pounds annually. It was then called the village of Southwark; it was afterwards styled the bailiwick of Southwark, and the mayor and commonalty of London appointed the bailiff. This power not being sufficient to remedy the evil, a more intimate connection was thought necessary: in the reign of Edward VI. on a valuable consideration payed to the crown, it was formed into a twenty-sixth ward, by the title of Bridge ward without, and Sir John Ayliff was its first alderman. It had long before enjoyed the privilege of sending members to parlement. It is mentioned among the boroughs in the time of Edward III; but the names of the first members which appear, are Robert Acton and Thomas Bulle, in 1542. The members are elected by the inhabitants paying scot and lot, and returned by the bailiff.

THE first time that Southwark is mentioned in history, is on occasion of earl Godwin's sailing up the river to attack the royal navy of fifty ships, lying before the palace of Westminster; this was in 1052, when we are told he went ad Suthwecree, and stayed there till the return of the tide.*

ST. GEORGE'S
CHURCH.

ST. GEORGE'S church is of considerable antiquity; it is mentioned in 1122, when Thomas of Arderne and his son bestowed it on the neighboring monks of Bermondsey.† It was rebuilt in 1736, by Price, with a spire steeple most awkwardly standing upon stilts. In old times there was a village called St. George's, now part of Southwark, independent of the borough. Polydore Virgil calls it "Suburbanus Divi Georgii " vicus."‡

CHARLES BRANDON.

NOT far from this church stood the magnificent palace of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk, the deserved favorite of Henry VIII. After his death, in 1545, it came into the king's hands, who established here a royal mint. It at that time was called Southwark Place, and in great measure preserved its dignity. Edward VI. once dined in it. His sister and successor presented it to Heath archbishop of York, as an inn or residence for him and his successors, whenever they repaired to London. It was pulled down in 1557.

As to the Mint, it became a sanctuary to insolvent debtors; at length becoming the pest of the neighborhood, by giving shelter to villains of every species, that awakened the attention of parlement; which, by the statutes 8 and 9 William III. c. 27. 9 George I. c. 29. and 11 George I. c. 22. entirely took away its abused privileges.

THE MINT.

THE King's-bench prison, in this parish, is of great antiquity. To this prison was committed Henry prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V. by the spirited and honest judge Gascoigne, for striking or insulting him on the bench. It is difficult to say which we should admire most, the courage of the judge, or the peaceful submission of the prince to the commitment, after he was freed from the phrenzy of his rage. The truth of the fact has been doubted; but, it is delivered by several grave historians, such as Hall, who died in 1547, who mentions it folio 1; Grafton, perhaps his copyist, at p. 443; and the learned Sir Thomas Elyot, a favorite of Henry VIII. in his book called The Governour, relates the same in p. 102, book ii. c. 6. of that treatise. These were all long prior to Shakespeare, or the author of another play, in the time of queen Elizabeth, styled Henry V. It must have been the poets that took up the relation from the historians, and not the historians from the poets, as some people have asserted. This was not the only time of his commitment. In 1411 he was confined by John Hornesby,* mayor of Coventry, in the Cheleysmor in that city; and arrested with his two brothers in the priory, probably for a riot committed there. The reform of this great prince was very early: for I never can believe him to have been a hypocrite when he wrote in the strain of piety to his father, on the subject of a victory obtained at Usk, over the famous Glyndwr.† He was at that time only seventeen years of age, and it appears that he quitted his follies long before the period in which the persisting in them becomes disgraceful to the prince or to the subject.

Nec lusisse pudet: sed non incidere ludum.

The other play of Henry V. which I allude to, was written before the year 1592. In the scene in which the historical account of the violence of the prince against the chief justice is introduced, Richard Tarlton, a famous comedian and mimic, acts both judge and clown. One Knell, another droll comedian of the time, acted the prince, and gave the chief justice such a blow as felled him to the ground, to the great diversion of the audience. Tarlton the judge, goes off the stage; and returns, Tarlton the clown; he demands the cause of the laughter, "O," says one, "had thou beenst here " to have seen what a terrible blow the prince " gave the judge." "What, strike a judge!" says the clown, "terrible indeed must it be to " the judge, when the very report of it makes my " cheek burn."*

to that court, and also to the king's palace at Westminster, stands here; this court had particular cognizance of murders, and other offences, committed within the king's court: such as striking, which in old times was punished with the loss of the offending hand. Here also persons guilty of piracies, and other offences on the high seas, were confined. In 1377 it was broken open by a mob of sailors, who murdered a gentleman confined in it for killing one of their comrades, and who had been pardoned by the court.† It was again broken open by Wat Tyler and his followers, in 1381. It escaped in the infamous riots of 1780; but the King's Bench, and the Borough prison, and another Borough prison called the

GARDEN.

IN this parish, near the water on Bank-side, stood Paris-Garden, one of the antient play-houses of our metropolis. Ben Johnson is reproached by Decker, an envious critic, with his ill success on the stage, and in particular with having performed the part of Zuliman, at Paris-Garden. It seems to have been much frequented on Sundays. This profanation was at length fully punished, by the dire accident which, heaven-directed, befel the spectators in 1582, when the scaffolding suddenly fell, and multitudes of people were killed or miserably maimed. The omen seems to have been accepted, for, in the next century, the manor of Paris-Garden was erected into a parish, and a church founded, under the name of CHRIST'S. This calamity seems to have been predicted by Crowley, a poet, of the reign of Henry VIII; who likewise informs us, that in this place were exhibited bear-baitings, as well as dramatical entertainments, and upon Sundays, as they are to this time at the Combat des Animaux, at Paris.

What folly is this to keep, with danger,
A great mastive dog, and fowle ouglie bear;
And to this an end, to see them two fight,
With terrible tearings, a ful ouglie sight.

And methinkes those men are most fools of al,
Whose store of money is but very smal,
And yet every Sunday they wil surely spend
One peny or two, the Bearwards living to mend.

At Paris Garden each Sunday a man shal not fail
To find two or three hundred for the Bearwards vale.
One halpenny a piece they use for to give,
When some have not more in their purses, I believe.
Wel, at the last day their conscience wil declare,
That the poor ought to have al that they may spare.
If you therefore give to see a bear fight,
Be sure God his curse upon you wil light.

BEYOND this place of brutal amusement were the Bear-Garden, and place for baiting bulls; the British circi: "Herein," says Stow,* "were kept beares, bulls, and other beasts to be bayted, as also mastives in several kenels, nourished to bayt them. These beares and other beasts are there kept in plots of ground scaffolded about for the beholders to stand safe." In the old maps these circi are engraven.

BEAR-baiting made one of the amusements of the romantic age of queen Elizabeth; for there was still left a strong tincture of those of a more savage and warlike period. It was introduced among the princely pleasures of Kenilworth, in 1575; where the droll author of the account introduces the bear and dogs, deciding their ancient grudge per duellum. "Well, Syr, (says he) the bearcz wear brought foorth intoo coourt, the

THIS was an amusement for persons of the first rank; our great princess Elizabeth thought proper to cause the French ambassadors to be carried to this theatre, to divert them with these bloody spectacles.†

NOT far from these scenes of cruel pastime THE STEWS. was the Bordello, or Stews, permitted, and openly licensed by government, under certain laws or regulations. They were farmed out. Even a lord mayor, the great Sir William Watworth, did not disdain to own them; and he rented them to the Froes, i. e. the bawds of Flanders. Among other regulations, no stewholder was to admit married women: nor, like pious Calvinists, in Holland, to this present day, were they to keep open their houses on Sundays; nor were they to admit any women who had on them the perilous infirmity of burning, &c. &c.‡ These infamous houses were suppressed in the reign of Henry VIII. The pretence of these establishments was to prevent the debauching the wives and daughters of the citizens, so that all who had not the gift of continence might have places to repair to. Perhaps, in days when thousands were tied up by vows of celibacy, these haunts might have been necessary ; for neither cowl nor cope had virtue sufficient to annihilate the strongest of human passions. Old Latimer complains bitterly, that the offence was not taken away with the suppression of the houses. “ One thing I must here,” says the zealous preacher, “ desire you to reforme, “ my lordes ; you have put down the Stewes. “ But, I pray you, how is the matter amended ? “ What avayleth that you have but changed the “ place, and not taken the wh—d-me away ?— “ There is now more wh—d-me in London then “ ever there was on the Bancke.”*

THE signs were not hung out, but painted against the walls. I cannot but smile at one: the Cardinal's Hat. I will not give into scandal so far as to suppose that this house was peculiarly protected by any coeval member of the sacred college. Neither would I by any means insinuate that the bishops of Winchester and Rochester, or the abbots of Waverley or of St. Augustine's, in Canterbury, or of Battel, or of Hyde, or the prior of Lewes, had here their temporary residences for them or their trains, for the sake of these conveniencies, in that period of cruel and unnatural restriction.

BESIDES these temporary mansions of holy men, were others, for those who preferred the monastic life. The first religious house was that of St. Mary Overie, said to have been originally founded by a maiden named Mary, for sisters, and endowed with the profits of a ferry cross the Eye, or river Thames. Swithen, a noble lady, changed it into a college of priests: but in the year 1106 it was re-founded by William Pont de L'arche, and William Dauncy, Norman knights, for canons regular. The last prior was Bartholomew Linsted, alias Fowle, who surrendered the convent to Henry, in October, 1540, and received in reward a pension of 100*l.* a year. Its revenues, according to Dugdale, were 654*l.* 6*s.* 6*d. William Giffard, bishop of Winchester, in the reign of Henry I. was a great benefactor to this place, and built the conventual church. It certainly was not the present church, for in the days of Giffard the round arch and clumsy pillar was in full fashion. This church was probably burnt in the fire which consumed the priory, in 1207: for we know it was rebuilt in the time of Richard II. or Henry IV. The whole is a beautiful pile of gothic architecture, in form of a cross, but much deformed by a wooden gallery, which the increase of the congregation occasioned to be built. On the dissolution, the inhabitants of Southwark purchased the church of the king, and converted it into a parish church; and, by act of parlement, united it with that of St. Margaret's of the Hill, under the name of St. Saviour's.

TOMB OF THE POET GOWER.

WITHIN, beneath a rich gothic arch in the north wall, is the monument* of the celebrated poet John Gower. His figure is placed recumbent, in a long gown; on his head is a chaplet of roses; and from his neck a collar of S S; under his feet are three books, denoting his three principal works. On one is inscribed Speculum Meditantis, which he had written in French; on the second, Vox Clamantis, written in Latin; and on the last, Confessio Amantis, in English. Above, on the wall, are painted three female figures crowned, and with scrolls in their hands.

The first, which is named Charitie, hath on her scroll

En toy qui es fite de Dieu le pere, Sauve soit que gist souz cest pierre.

On that of the second, who is named Mercie,

O bone Jesu fait ta mercie,
Al alme dont le corps gist icy.

And on the scroll of the third, named Pitie,

Pur ta pite Jesu regarde!
Et met cest alme en sauve garde.

* Figured in Gough's Sepulchral Monuments, ii. 24. tab. viii. Ed.

HE founded a chauntry for himself within these walls, and was also a signal benefactor to the church, and contributed largely to build it in its present elegant form. He was a man of family, and had a liberal education, according to the times, in the inns of court. Notwithstanding the word Armiger in the modern inscription, it is probable he was a knight.* He was cotemporary with, and the great friend of Chaucer, whom he styles "his pupil and his poet;" a proof of seniority, notwithstanding he survived him.

Grete wel CHAUCER, whan ye mete,
As my Disciple and my Poete;
For in the flours of his youth,
In sondrie wise, as he well couth,
Of Detees and of Songes glade,
The which he for my sake made.

Chaucer is not a bit behind hand in marks of respect.

O moral GOWER, this boke I direct
To the, and to the philosophical Strode.
To vouchsafe there nede is to correcte,
Of your benignities and zelis gode.

THESE excellent characters lived together in the most perfect amity: Chaucer was a severe reprover of the vices of the clergy: and each united in their great and successful endeavour to give a polish to the English language. Chaucer gave a free rein to his poetical mirth. " Gower's poetry was " grave and sententious. He has much good sense, " solid reflection, and useful observation. But " he is serious and didactic on all occasions. " He preserves the tone of the scholar, and the " moralist, on the most lively topics."* These fathers of English poetry followed each other closely to the grave. Chaucer died in 1400, aged 72. Gower in 1402, blind and full of years.

OF BISHOP
ANDREWS.

A RECUMBENT figure of a bishop, in his robes and badges, as prelate of the Garter, commemorates the pious, hospitable, and witty Launcelot Andrews, bishop of Winchester, who died in his adjacent palace, in 1624, aged seventy-one. James I. at dinner, attended by Neile, bishop of Durham, and this amiable churchman, asked of the first, whether he might not take his subjects money without the assistance of parlement? " God " forbid," says the servile Neile, " but you " should: you are the breath of our nostrils." Then, turning to Andrews, " Well, my lord, what say you?" The good bishop would have evaded the question, but the king being peremptory, he answered, " Then, Sir, I think it lawful to take " my brother Neile's money, for he offers it."

A QUACK
DOCTOR.

A FIGURE with its head reclined on one hand, in a great wig, and furred gown, represents Lionel

* Mr. Thomas Warton.

Lockyer, a celebrated quack of the reign of Charles II. His virtues and his pills are thus expressed :

His virtues and his pills so well are known,
That envy can't confine them under stone ;
But they'll survive his dust, and not expire
Till all things else, at th' universal fire.
This verse is lost, his pills embalm him safe
To future times without an epitaph.

I believe the last to be prophetic ; his pills are still to be found among the long list of quackeries which promise almost immortality to the credulous taker.

HERE are two other ridiculous epitaphs, which promise to the deceased a place in court, after they have passed the limits of the grave. Thus, John Trehearne, porter to James I. is told of the reversion he is to have in heaven :

RIDICULOUS
EPITAPHS.

In thy king's court good place to thee is given,
Whence thou shalt go to the King's court of heaven.

But Miss Barford is flattered in a still higher manner :

Such grace the King of Kings bestow'd upon her,
That now she lives with him a maid of honour.

AGAINST a wall is a singular diminutive figure, one foot three inches long, said to represent a dwarf, one William Emerson, who died in 1575, æt. 92. He is represented half naked, much emaciated, lying in his shroud on a mat, most neatly cut.

JOHN FLETCHER, the celebrated dramatic poet of the reign of James I. was buried in this church, August the 19th, 1625, aged 49. He died of the plague : his memory is preserved in his works ; for I do not find either monument or epitaph to deliver down his fame to posterity.

I SHALL conclude this list with the monument of Richard Humble, his two wives, and children ; not on account of their grotesque figures, but for the sake of the pretty and moral inscription cut on one side.

A PRETTY
ONE.

Like to the damask rose you see,
Or like the blossom on the tree,
Or like the dainty flower of May,
Or like the morning of the day ;
Or like the sun, or like the shade,
Or like the gourd which Jonas had :
Even so is man, whose thread is spun,
Drawn out and cut, and so is done.
The rose withers, the blossom blasteth,
The flower fades, the morning hasteth ;
The sun sets, the shadow flies,
The gourd consumes, and man he dies.

WINCHES-
TER-HOUSE.

WINCHESTER-HOUSE was a very large building, not far from this church : the founder is unknown. Till the civil wars of the last century, it was the residence of the prelates during their attendance in parlement. Much of it is yet standing, tenanted by different families, or converted into warehouses.

The great court is called Winchester-square, and in the adjacent street is the abutment of one of the gates. On the desertion of this palace, the prelates of Winchester had another allotted to them at Chelsea.

THE Clink, or manor of Southwark, is still THE CLINK. under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Winchester; who, besides a court-leet, keeps a court of record on the Bank-side, by his steward and bailiff, for pleas of debt, trespasses, &c.

IN Southwark Park, on the back of Winchester-house, was found, by Sir William Dugdale, knight, in 1658, in sinking the cellars for some new buildings, a very curious tessellated pavement, with a border in the form of a serpentine column.*

A LITTLE to the west of this church is a lane called Stoney-street, which runs down to the water-side, nearly opposite to Dowgate, and probably was the continuation of the Watling-street road. This is supposed to have been a Roman Trajectus, and the ferry from Londinum into the province of Cantium. Marks of the antient causey have been discovered on the northern side; on this, the name evinces the origin. The Saxons always give the name of Street to the Roman roads; and here they gave it the addition of Stein or Stoney, from the pavement they found it composed of.

DEADMAN'S PLACE.

DEADMAN'S place lies a little farther: tradition says that it took its name from the number of dead interred there in the great plague, soon after the Restoration.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.

FROM the calamity which destroyed St. Mary Overie's, in the year 1207, arose one of our noblest hospitals, that of St. Thomas. After the fire, the canons built, at a small distance from the priory, an occasional building for their reception till their house could be re-built. But in 1215, Peter de Rupibus, bishop of Winchester, disliking the situation, removed it to a place on which Richard, a Norman prior of Bermondsey, had, in 1213, erected an hospital for converts and poor children, which he called the Almery. Peter de Rupibus new founded it for canons regular, and endowed it with three hundred and forty-four pounds a year. It was held from the prior and abbot of Bermondsey, till the year 1428, when a composition was made between the abbot and the master of the hospital of St. Thomas, for all the lands and tenements held of the abbey for the old rent, to be paid to the said abbot. At the Dissolution it was surrendered into the hands of the king. In 1552, it was founded a third time, by the citizens of London, who purchased the suppressed hospital: in July they began the reparation, and in November following opened it for the reception of the sick and poor; not fewer than two hundred and sixty were the first objects of the charity. The patron was at the same time changed: the turbulent Thomas Becket very properly giving place to the worthy apostle St. Thomas.

TOWARDS the end of the last century, the building fell into decay. In the year 1699 the governors solicited the benevolence of the public for its support: and with such success, that they were enabled to rebuild it on the magnificent and extensive plan we now see. It consists of three courts, with colonnades between each: three wards were built at the sole cost of Thomas Fre-deric, esquire, of London: and three by Thomas Guy, citizen and stationer. The whole containing eighteen wards, and 442 beds. The expences attending this foundation are about 10,000*l.* a year. In the middle of the second court is a statue in brass of Edward VI. and beneath him the representation of the halt and maimed.

IN that of the third court is a stone statue of Sir Robert Clayton, knight, lord mayor of London, dressed in character, in his gown and chain. He gave 600*l.* towards re-building this hospital; and left 2,300*l.* towards endowing it. The statue was erected before his death, which happened in 1714.

ACCOUNT OF MR. GUY: HIS HOSPITAL.

THIS excellent institution has, within the last ten years, admitted and discharged,

In-patients, 30,717. Out-patients, 47,099.

And in the last account of 1787, it appears there were admitted and discharged

; 2,758 In-patients, 5,191 Out-patients.

Total in the year—7,949.

GUY'S HOS-PITAL.

MR. Guy, not satisfied with his great benefactions to the hospital of St. Thomas, determined to be the sole founder of another. The relation is very remarkable. At the age of seventy-six, he took a lease, of the governors of the former, of a piece of ground opposite to it, for the term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years, and on it, in 1721, at the expence of 18,793*l.* 16*s.* began to build the hospital which bears his name: and left to endow it, the prodigious sum of 219,499*l.* amassed from a very small beginning, chiefly by purchasing seamen's tickets! in the reign of queen Anne; and by his great success in buying and selling South Sea stock, in the memorable year 1720; and (ostensively) by the sale of bibles!—he seems to have profited "both of God and Mammon."

HE was the son of an Anabaptist lighterman and coal-monger, in Southwark. On the death of his father, his mother brought him to Tamworth, her native town; and at a fit age bound him apprentice to a bookbinder and bookseller, in Cheapside. On the expiration of his term, he set up for himself with the small sum of two hundred pounds. He joined with a set of booksellers, who carried on a trade in bibles, printed in, and smuggled out of Holland, to the great injury of the lawful printers. This was done for a considerable time; till the king's printers, by several prosecutions and seizures, obliged these illicit traders to desist. Guy, more artful and more pertinacious than his late partners, prevailed on the university of Oxford to contract with him for their privilege of printing bibles. But it is generally supposed that his great wealth was acquired by those articles in which Heaven most certainly had no concern. Attached to Tamworth, he founded there an almshouse and a library; and left a perpetual annuity of 125*l.* for their maintenance, as well as for apprenticing poor children belonging to the town; which chose him for one of its representatives.* His death happened on December 27th, 1724, in the 80th year of his age; before which he saw his hospital covered with the roof. In the first court is his statue in brass, dressed in his livery gown. Besides his public expences, he gave, during life, to many of his poor relations, 10*l.* or 20*l.* a year; and to others money to advance them in life; he bequeathed to his aged relations, 870*l.* in annuities; and to his younger relations and executors, the sum of 75,589*l.!!!

* Maitland, ii. 1306.

IN the chapel (shouldering God's altar) is another statue of Mr. Guy, a most elegant performance, by Mr. J. Bacon, in 1779, in white marble. He is represented standing, in his livery gown, with one hand raising a miserable sick object, and with the other pointing to a second object, on a bier, carried by two persons into his hospital. This superfluity cost a thousand pounds; a proof of the exuberant wealth of the foundation, which could spare such a sum to be wasted on a needless occasion. I was told that at this time there were only two hundred beds: three wards being out of use, undergoing certain alterations. But I could not obtain the least account of the annual number of patients, or of the expenditure, or revenue; which other hospitals never fail to lay before the public. A repeated recent application has been equally unsuccessful.†

* He also bequeathed to Christ's Hospital an annuity of 400*l.* for receiving four children, yearly; and 1000*l.* for discharging poor prisoners within the city and counties of Middlesex and Surrey, who could be released for 5*l.* In consequence of this legacy, above six hundred persons have obtained their liberty. ED.

† Mr. Highmore, in his history of public charities, says, that a corporation was established by act of parliament, in 1724, for the purpose of carrying Mr. Guy's will into execution; and adds, that

MR. Maitland obtained a septenary account of the patients admitted into this hospital between the years 1728 and 1734, by which we learn, that in the seven years they amounted to 12,402; and that the total disbursements in the year 1738 amounted to seven thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight pounds: and then the house contained twelve wards, and four hundred and thirty-five beds.

IN the laboratory is a large medallion in white marble of the great and pious BOYLE.

THE other religious house in Southwark was BERMONDSEY ABBY. Bermondsey, founded in 1082, by Aylwin Childe, a citizen of London, for monks of the Cluniac order: a cargo of which were imported hither by favor of archbishop Lanfranc, in the year 1089, from the priory De Caritate, on the Loire, in Nivernois. Soon after the resumption of the alien priories, it was converted into an abbey by Richard II. In 1539,* it was surrendered into the king's hands by Robert de Wharton, who had his reward, not only of a pension of 333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* but also the bishoprick of St. Asaph† in commendam. The revenues of the house at the Dissolu-

the average number of patients received for seven years after its foundation, amounted annually to seventeen hundred and seventy. He gives little information respecting its present state, more than that the officers are numerous, that there is a small neat building for lunatics, thirteen wards, and four hundred and eleven beds. tion were 474*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*; the poor monks received the annual pension of from ten to about five pounds apiece.

THE conventual church was then pulled down by Sir Thomas Pope, who built a magnificent house on the site. This became the habitation of the Ratcliffs, earls of Sussex. Thomas, the great rival of the favorite earl of Leicester, breathed his last within its walls.

CHURCH OF
ST. MARY
MAGDALEN.

THE present parochial church of St. Mary Magdalen was founded by the priors of Bermondsey, for the use of their adjoining tenants.

THE remains of antiquity in this neighborhood are, the antient gate of the abbey, with a large arch and a postern on one side. Adjoining is part of a very old building; and on passing beneath the arch, and turning to the left, is to be seen, within a court, a house of very great antiquity, called (for what reason I know not) king John's court.

BERMONDSEY
STREET.

BERMONDSEY-street may at present be called the great Wool Staple of our kingdom. Here reside numbers of merchants, who supply Rochdale, Leicester, Derby, Exeter, and most other weaving districts in this kingdom, with that commodity. As Southwark may be considered as a great suburb to London, various other trades are carried on there to a vast extent: the Tanners, Curriers, Hatters, Dyers, Iron-founders, Rope-makers, Sail-makers, and Block-makers, occupy a considerable part of the borough.

THE most eastern parish in Southwark, is that of St. Olave, or Olaf, so named from the Danish prince who was massacred by his Pagan subjects. The church appears to have been founded nearly five hundred years ago.* The parish extends from the spot on London-bridge, on which was the draw-bridge, and stretches along the water-side as far as St. Saviour's Dock. In this parish, near the church, was the inn or lodging of the abbot of Lewes in Sussex. The chapel is still remaining, converted into a cellar, and, by the accumulation of earth, sunk under ground : and a gothic building, now turned into a wine-vault belonging to the King's-head tavern, may have been part of the mansion.

ST. OLAVE, OR OLAF'S
CHURCH.

St. John's in Horsley-down is one of the fifty new churches. The spire is fluted, and ends absurdly enough in the Ionic scroll.

ON Sellenger's wharf stood the town-house of the abbot of St. Augustine's at Canterbury ; which being granted to Sir Anthony Saint-Leger, the wharf was named after him, but corrupted according to the modern spelling.†

its name from the house : as did the streets called the Mazes, from the luxurious intricacies in his magnificent gardens.*

ST. SAVIOUR'S
DOCK.

ST. Saviour's Dock, or, as it is called, Savory, bounds the eastern end of this parish. St. Saviour's Dock may be considered as the port of Southwark. It is in length about four hundred yards, but of most disproportionable breadth, not exceeding thirty feet. The borough will certainly give it a more useful magnitude : and also rebuild the warehouses and magazines on each side. It is at present solely appropriated to barges, which discharge coals, copperas from Writtlesea in Essex, pipe-clay, corn, and various other articles of commerce. If the dock was deepened, and correspondent wharfs were erected, sloops and smaller vessels might come from different sea-ports, and here discharge their cargoes, without the expence of re-loading lesser craft, in order to re-land them at this dock. It antiently belonged to the priory of St. Saviour's Bermondsey, as did certain adjacent mills, which in 1536 were let by the monks to one John Curlew, for 6*l.* then the value of eighteen quarters of good wheat ; and he was besides bound to grind gratis all the corn used in that religious house.

HITHE.

parish of Rotherhithe or Redriff, which consists chiefly of one street of a vast length, running along the shore, and winding with the great bend of the river, to a very small distance from Deptford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary; the steeple consists of a square tower with a circular lanthorn, formed in the upper part of a peristyle of Corinthian columns: and out of its summit issues an elegant polygonal spire.—I introduce this parish, because it is comprehended in the bills of mortality, having been taken in, in the year 1636, with five other parishes. Near the extremity of this parish are the docks for the Greenland ships; a profitable nuisance, very properly removed to a distance from the capital. The greater dock is supposed to have been the mouth of the famous canal, cut in 1016 by king Canute, in order to avoid the impediment of London-bridge, and to lay siege to the capital by bringing his fleet to the west side.

THE Loke, in Southwark, was a hospital for leprous persons. It was dedicated to St. Leonard, and existed in the time of Edward II: till lately, it was, under the care of the hospital of St. Bartholomew, appropriated to the cure of another loathsome disease. The word changed into Lock, possibly has allusion to the necessity of the inmates being locked or kept apart from all other patients.

TABARD,
CHAUCER'S
INN.

As the Borough High-street was the great passage into a great part of our kingdom, to and from our capital, it was particularly well furnished with inns. I shall only mention one immortalized by Chaucer. The sign is now perverted into the Talbot. It originally was the Tabard, so called from the sign—a sleeveless coat, open on both sides, with a square collar, and winged at the shoulders; worn by persons of rank in the wars, with their arms painted on them that they might be known. The use is now transferred to the Heralds. This was the rendezvous of the jolly pilgrims, who formed the troop which our father of poetry describes sallying out to pay its devotions to the great St. Thomas Becket, who for a long time superseded almost every other Saint.

Befelle that in that season, on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay,
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devoute corage,
At night was come into that hostellerie
Wel nine and twenty in a compaignie,
Of sondry folk, by aventure yfalle,
In felawship, and pilgrimes were they alle,
That toward Canterbury wolden ride.
The chambres and the stables weren wide,
And wel we weren esed atte beste.

The memory of our great poet's pilgrimage is perpetuated by an inscription over the gateway:
" This is the inn where Sir Jeffry Chaucer, and “ nine and twenty pilgrims, lodged, in their journey to Canterbury, in 1383.”

A LITTLE west of St. Mary Overie's (in a place still called Globe Alley) stood the Globe, immortalized by having been the theatre on which Shakespeare first trod the stage, but in no higher character than the Ghost in his own play of Hamlet. It appears to have been of an octagonal form; and is said to have been covered with rushes.* I have been told that the door was very lately standing. James I. granted a patent to Laurence Fletcher, WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Richard Burbage, Augustine Philippes, John Heminges, Henrie Condell, William Sly, Robert Armin, and Richard Cowlie, and others of his majesty's servants, to act here, or in any other part of the kingdom. Notwithstanding the modesty of Shakespeare made him decline taking any considerable part in his own productions, his good-nature, and friendship for the morose Ben Johnson, induced him to act both in the Sejanus and Every Man in his Humour; a benevolence that greatly contributed to bring the latter into public notice. But in Shakespeare's own plays, Dick Burbage, as he was familiarly called, was the favorite actor. Condell and Heminges were his intimate friends: and published his plays in folio, seven years after his death.

THE GLOBE, SHAKE-SPEARE'S
THEATRE.

* See an engraving of it in vol. I. of Johnson's Shakespeare.

THE playhouses, in and about London, were by this time extremely numerous, there not being fewer than seventeen between the years 1570 and 1629.

WESTMINSTER.

I NOW return to the extremity of the western part of our capital, on the northern bank of the river. In the time of queen Elizabeth, the shore opposite to Lambeth was a mere marshy tract.

MILL-BANK. Mill-bank, the last dwelling in Westminster, is a large house, which took its name from a mill which once occupied its site. Here, in my boyish days, I often experienced the hospitality of the late Sir Robert Grosvenor,* its worthy owner, by an ancestor of whom, it was purchased from the Mordaunts, earls of Peterborough. All the rest of his vast property about London devolved on him in right of his mother, Mary, daughter and heiress of Alexander Davies of Ebury, in the county of Middlesex. I find, in the plan of London by Hollar, a mansion on this spot, under the name of Peterborough-house. It probably was built by the first earl of Peterborough. It was inhabited by his successors, and retained its name till the time of the death of that great but irregular genius Charles, earl of Peterborough, in 1735. It was rebuilt in its present form by the Grovenor family.

A LITTLE farther was the antient Horse-ferry between Westminster and Lambeth: suppressed on the building of Westminster-bridge. The ferry having been the property of the archbishops of Canterbury, they were allowed the sum of 3,000*l.* which was funded.

HORSE-FERRY.

A LITTLE beyond the Horse-ferry stands the church of St. John the Evangelist, one of the fifty voted by parlement, to give this part of the town the air of the capital of a Christian country. It was begun in 1721, and finished in 1728. The architect was Mr. Archer, but Sir John Vanbrugh has usually the discredit of this pile.* Notwithstanding it is deservedly censured for its load of ornaments, they are by no means destitute of beauty. The aim at excess of magnificence is not a fault peculiar to the builder.

ST. JOHN THE EVAN-GELIST'S.

AT a small distance to the east is that noble specimen of gothic architecture, the conventual church of St. Peter's abbey of Westminster. The church is said to have been founded about the year 610, by Sebert king of the East-Saxons, on the ruins of the temple of Apollo, flung down, quoth legend, by an earthquake. The king dedicated his new church to St. Peter; who descended in person, with a host of heavenly choristers, to save the bishop, Mellitus, the trouble of consecration. The saint descended on the Surry side, in a stormy night; but, prevailing on Edric, a fisherman, to waft him over, performed the ceremony: and, as a proof, left behind the chrism, and precious droppings of the wax candles, with which the astonished fisherman saw the church illuminated. He conveyed the saint safely back; who directed him to inform the bishop that there was no farther need of consecration. He likewise directed Edric to fling out his nets, who was rewarded with a miraculous draught of salmons: the saint also promised to the fisherman and his successors, that they never should want plenty of salmon, provided they presented every tenth to his church. This custom was observed till at least the year 1382. The fisherman that day had a right to sit at the same table with the prior; and he might demand of the cellarer, ale and bread; and the cellarer again might take of the fish's tail as much as he could, with four fingers and his thumb erect.

THE place in which it was built was then styled Thornie island, from its being over-run with thorns and briers; and it was besides insulated by a branch of the Thames. Part of the insolation seems to remain. It commences a little above the old bridge at Chelsea, leading to Jenny's Whim, and the secondary stream supplies Chelsea water-works.* This church was burnt by the Danes; and restored by the incontinent king Edgar, in 958, under the influence of St. Dunstan, the most continent of men, and such a lover of celibacy that he drove out of the church every married priest. Edgar ravished nuns: but he founded or re-founded fifty monasteries, and planted, with very poor endowments, in this, twelve monks of the Benedictine order.

REBUILT BY EDGAR.

It was reserved for the pious Confessor to rebuild both church and abbey; he began the work in 1049, and finished it in a most magnificent manner in 1066, and endowed it with the utmost munificence. An abbey is nothing without reliques. Here was to be found the veil, and some of the milk of the Virgin: the blade-bone of St. Benedict: the finger of St. Alphage: the head of St.

RELIQUES.

* According to Maitland, Thorney island was effected by a branch of the Thames, which entered from the east at the spot in Channel or Canon-row, where Manchester-buildings now stand, and running westward, intersected King-street, then followed Gardener's-lane, Prince's-street, and College-street, till it was re-united with the river. The editor of Smith's antiquities of Westminster fixes its commencement farther north, to a spot adjoining the southern end of the present Privy-gardens, the boundary of the ancient palace of Whitehall. Ep.

Marilla: and half the jaw-bone of St. Anastasia. The good Edward was buried in his own church. William the Conqueror bestowed on his tomb a rich pall: and in 1163, Henry II. lodged his body in a costly ferretry, translating it from its pristine place.

THIS church had been a noted sanctuary, and was one of those exempted from suppression by Henry VIII. Stow thinks that the privilege was granted to this church by its founder, king Sebert. That venerable and able antiquary the Reverend Mr. Pegge, supposes that it only took place after the canonization of Edward the Confessor, in 1198. I refer to his elaborate work on the subject of sanctuaries, in the eighth volume of the Archæologia. I shall only mention a very remarkable instance of a most sacrilegious violation of the privilege in this very church: in which, in the year 1378, Robert Haule, and John Schakel, esquires, had taken refuge, for no other reason than to save their persons from the rage of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, for refusing to deliver to him a French hostage, to whose ransom they had a right. The duke sent here fifty armed men. They first seduced Schakel from the sanctuary. Haule refused to confide in their promises; but remained at the altar, attending at high mass. Haule made a manful resistance with his short sword, and drove them into the chancel, where he was slain. In his last words he recommended himself to God, the avenger of such injuries ; and to the liberty of our holy mother the church. With him was murdered his servant, and a monk who had entreated the assassins not to violate the holiness of the place. Haule was interred in the abby. Part of an inscription, relative to this cruel act, was remaining on a brass, in the time of Weever.* Sudbury, archbishop of Canterbury, made complaint in parlement of this breach of privilege. The church was shut about four months, till it was purified from the profanation. The offenders were excommunicated, a large sum of money paid to the church, and all its privileges confirmed in the next parlement.

EITHER from the decay of the building, or a particular zeal and affection which Henry III. had for the royal Confessor, that prince pulled down the Saxon pile, and rebuilt it in its present elegant and magnificent form. In 1245 he undertook this great work, in the mode of architecture which began to take place in his days, but did not carry it on farther than four arches west of the middle tower ; and the vaulting of this was not finished till 1296. He did not live to complete his design, which was carried on by his successor. It advanced slowly in succeeding reigns, and, from the portcullis on the roof of the last arches, it appears that Henry VII. or VIII. contributed to the repairs, that being the device of those monarchs. It was never finished: the great tower, and two western towers, remaining incomplete at the Reformation; after which the two present towers arose. That in the centre is wanting. A casual fire had long before destroyed the roof; but by the piety of Edward and several of the abbots it was restored to the beauty and splendor we so justly admire.

HENRY III. performed two acts of pious respect to the remains of the founders of this abbey, which must not be omitted. He translated those of Sebert into a tomb of touchstone, beneath an arch made in the wall. Above were paintings, long since defaced, done by order of the king, who was strongly imbued with the love of the arts; *Mr. Walpole has preserved several of the precepts for a number of paintings in this church, and other places. Among them are directions for painting duos CHERUMBINOS cum hilari vultu et jocoso.

BUT what does that prince the most honor is the shrine,† which he caused to be made in honor of the Confessor, placed in a chapel which bears his name. This beautiful mosaic work was the performance of Peter Cavallini, inventor of that species of ornament. It is supposed that he was brought into England by the abbot Ware, who visited Rome in 1256. Weever expressly says, "He brought from thence certain workmen, and "rich porphery stones, whereof hee made that "curious, singular, rare pavement before the high "altar; and with these stones and workmen he "did also frame the shrine of Edward the Confessor."* This beautiful memorial consists of three rows of arches; the lower pointed, the upper round: and on each side of the lower is a most elegant twisted pillar, an ornament the artist seems peculiarly fond of. Children, or childish age, have greatly injured this beautiful shrine, by picking out the mosaic, through the shameful connivance of the attendant vergers.

ROUND this chapel are twelve other chapels, all built by Henry III. They were an after-thought, and formed no part of the original design. Before this shrine seem to have been offered the spolia opima. The Scotch regalia, and the sacred chair from Scone, were offered here; and Alphonso, third son to Edward I. who died in his childhood, presented the golden coronet of our unfortunate prince the last Llewelyn.

ANOTHER,
BY THE SAME ARTIST.

THIS is not the only specimen of Cavalini's skill, which we possess in this kingdom. Mr. *Walpole has, at his beautiful villa near town, another shrine of his workmanship, brought, in 1768, from the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, in Rome; and placed in a chapel in his gardens. It was erected, in 1256, over the bodies of the holy martyrs Simplicius, Faustina, and Beatrix, by John James Capoccio, and Vinia his wife. It differs in form from the shrine of St. Edward, but is formed of the same materials, and adorned with the same twisted columns.

ALONG the freeze of the screen of the chapel, are fourteen legendary sculptures respecting the Confessor. They are so rudely done, that we may conclude that the art at this time was at a very low ebb. The first is the trial of queen Emma. The next the birth of Edward. Another is his coronation. The fourth tells us how our saint was frightened into the abolition of the dane-gelt, by seeing the devil dance upon the money bags. The fifth is the story of his winking at the thief who was robbing his treasury. The sixth is meant to relate the appearance of our SAVIOUR to him. The seventh shews how the invasion of England was frustrated by the drowning of the Danish king. Eighthly is seen the quarrel between the boys Tosti and Harold, predicting their respective fates. In the ninth sculpture is the Confessor's vision of the seven sleepers. Tenthly, how he meets St. John the Evangelist in the guise of a pilgrim. Eleventhly, how the blind were cured by their eyes being washed in his dirty water. Twelfthly, how St. John delivers to the pilgrims a ring. In the thirteenth they deliver the ring to the king, which he had unknowingly given to St. John as an alms, when he met him in the form of a pilgrim. This was attended with a message from the Saint, foretelling the death of the king. And the fourteenth shews the consequential haste made by him to complete his pious foundation.*

IN this very chapel is a third proof of the skill of Cavalini or some of his pupils. It is an altar tomb of Henry himself, enriched like the shrine, and with wreathed columns at each corner.† The figure of this prince, who died in 1272, is of brass, and placed recumbent. This is supposed to have been the first brazen image known to have been cast in our kingdom. The little book, sold at the door to the visitors of this solemn scenery, will be a sufficient guide to the fine and numerous fune-

HIS TOMB, BY

* All these are accurately engraven and fully explained, in the first volume of Mr. Carter's Antiquities.

brial memorials of the place. Let me only observe, that here may be read an excellent lecture on the progress of these efforts of human skill, from the simple altar tomb to the most ostentatious proofs of human vanity. The humble recumbent figure with uplifted hands, as if deprecating the justice of Heaven for the offences of this mortal state ; or the proper kneeling attitude, supplicating that mercy which the purest must stand in need of, may be seen here in various degrees of elegance. The careless lolling attitude of heroes in long gowns and flowing periwigs succeeds ; and after them, busts or statues vaunting their merits, and attended with such a train of Pagan deities, as would almost lead to suppose it a heathen Pantheon instead of a Christian church.

As far as respects the figures on the antient tombs, there is a dull uniformity. They generally are recumbent ; often with their hands joined, and erect. If their spouses are placed on their side, as a mark of conjugal affection, the hand of one is clasped in that of the other. Frequently the legs of the hero are crossed, in case he had gained that honorable privilege by the merits of a crusade, and his hand is employed in the menacing action of unsheathing his sword. The sides of the tombs are often embellished with figures of the offspring of the deceased ; frequently with figures of mourners, pleureurs, or weepers,* generally in monastic habits, as whole convents were wont (and still are accustomed, in Catholic countries) to pour out their pious inhabitants to form processions at the funerals of the great. In our capital, the fraternity of Augustine Papey, the threescore priests of Leaden-hall, and the company of parish-clerks, skilled in singing diriges and the funeral offices, were accustomed to attend the solemn burials.

TASTELESS as are the figures of the deceased, yet the ornaments above are often in the richest style that the wild unfettered genius of Gothic architecture could invent; fine and light sculpture of foliage, of animals, or human forms. The monuments of Aymer de Valence earl of Pembroke, who was murdered in France in 1323, and of Edmund Crouchback earl of Lancaster, are magnificent. On the side of these tombs are the figures of the pleureurs, or mourners, exemplified in numbers of other tombs in this kingdom. Mr. Gough has favored us with very elegant engravings of both of these, in his splendid work on British sepulchral monuments.

* See the curious contract, in Dugdale's Warwickshire, p. 354, between the executors of Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, and John Essar, marbler; William Austin, founder; and Thomas Stevens, copper-smith; for their making xiv lords and ladyes in divers vestures called sweepers, and xiv images of mourners, to be gilt by Bartholomew Lamberpring, Dutchman, and goldmythe of London.

TASTE IN SCULPTURE.

IN the reigns of queen Elizabeth, and James I. begins to appear a ray of taste in the sculptors. I shall instance one of the six sons of Henry lord Norris, who appear kneeling round his magnificent cenotaph (for he was buried at Rycot) in the chapel of St. Andrew. This figure has one hand on his breast, the other a little removed from it; an attitude of devotion, inexpressibly fine, in defiance of the ungraceful dress of the time. Lord Norris died in 1589.*

ANOTHER proof is in the monument of Sir Francis Vere, who died in 1608, distinguished by thirty years of able service in the Low Countries in the reign of Elizabeth. He is represented in a gown recumbent; over him, four fine figures of armed knights, kneeling on one knee, support a marble slab, on which are strewed the various parts of his armour. At Breda is the tomb of Ingelbert II. count of Nassau, who died in 1504, executed on the same idea.

THE figure of young Francis Hollis, son of John earl of Clare, cut off at the age of eighteen, in 1622, on his return from a campaign in the Netherlands, has great merit. He is placed, dressed

* Dugdale's Baronage, ii. 404.—Dart, by mistake, calls this nobleman Francis; who was grandson to Henry, and left only one child, a daughter. He fell a suicide, in a fit of proud resentment, for an imaginary affront on account of a lord Scrope, which he had not the sense, or the courage, to accommodate in a proper manner.

like a Grecian warrior, on an altar, in a manner that does great credit to Nicholas Stone, or rather to the earl, to whom Mr. Walpole justly attributes the design.

THE figure of Doctor Busby, master of Westminster school, who died in 1695, is elegant and spirited. He lies resting on one arm; a pen in one, a book in the other hand: his countenance looking up. His loose dress is very favorable to the sculptor,* who has given it most graceful flows: the close cap alone is inimical to his art.

I CANNOT go through the long series of tombs: nor will I attempt, like the Egyptians of old, to bring the silent inhabitants to a posthumous trial, or draw their frailties to light. I will only mention the crowned heads who here repose, till that day comes which will level every distinction of rank, and shew every individual in his proper character. Qualis erat, says a beautiful and modest inscription, iste dies indicabit.

THE second of our monarchs who lies here, is EDWARD I. the renowned Edward I. in an altar tomb, as modest and plain, as his fame was great. A long inscription in monkish lines imperfectly records the deeds of the conqueror of Scotland, and of the antient Britons. In 1770, antiquarian curiosity was so urgent with the respectable dean of West- minster, as to prevale on him to permit certain members of the society, under proper regulations, to inspect the remains of this celebrated hero; and discover, if possible, the composition which gave such duration to the human body. The writs *de cera renovanda circa corpus regis Edwardi primi being extant, gave rise to this search.

IN the minute relation by that able and worthy antiquary the late Sir Joseph Ayleffe, bart. almost every particular is given. On lifting up the lid of the tomb, the royal body was found wrapped in a strong thick linen cloth, wared on the inside: the head and face were covered with a sudarium or face-cloth of crimson sarcenet, wrapped into three folds, conformable to the napkin used by our Saviour in his way to his crucifixion, as we are assured by the church of Rome. On flinging open the external mantle, the corpse was discovered in all the ensigns of majesty, richly habited. The body was wrapped in a fine linen cere-cloth, closely fitted to every part, even to the very fingers and face. Over the cere-cloth was a tunic of red silk damask; above that a stole of thick white tissue crossed the breast, and on this, at six inches distance from each other, quatre-foils of philligree-work, of gilt metal set with false stones, imitating rubies, sapphires, amethysts, &c.; and the intervals between the quatre-foils on the stole, powdered with minute white beads, tacked down into a most elegant embroidery, in form not unlike what is called the true lover's knot. Above these habits was the royal mantle of rich crimson satten, fastened on the left shoulder with a magnificent fibula, of gilt metal richly chased, and ornamented with four pieces of red, and four of blue, transparent paste, and twenty-four more pearls. The corpse, from the waist downwards, was covered with a rich cloth of figured gold, which fell down to the feet and was tucked beneath them. On the back of each hand was a quatre-foil like those on the stole. In his right hand was a sceptre with a cross of copper gilt, and of elegant workmanship, reaching to the right shoulder. In the left hand the rod and dove, which passed over the shoulder and reached the royal ear. The dove stood on a ball placed on three ranges of oak leaves of enamelled green; it was of white enamel. On the head was a crown charged with trefoils made of gilt metal.* The head was lodged in the cavity of the stone-coffin, always observable in those receptacles of the dead. I refer the reader to the Archæologia for the other minutiae attendant on the habiting of the royal corpse. It was dressed in conformity to antient usage, even as early as the time of the Saxon Sebert. The use of the cerecloth is continued to our days: in the instance of our late king, the two serjeant-surgeons had 122*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* each for opening and embalming; and the apothecary 152*l.* for a fine double cere-cloth, and a due quantity of rich perfumed aromatic powders.*

ELEANOR HIS QUEEN.

ELEANOR of Castile, the beautiful and affectionate queen of Edward, was in 1290 deposited here. Her figure,† in copper gilt, rests on a tablet of the same, placed on an altar tomb of Petworth marble.

THE murdered prince Edward II. found his grave at Glocester: his son, the glorious warrior EDWARD III. Edward III. rests here. His figure at full length, made of copper once gilt, lies beneath a rich gothic shrine of the same material. His hair is disheveled, his beard long and flowing. His gown reaches to his feet. Each hand holds a sceptre. The figures of his children in brass surround the altar tomb.‡ His worthy queen Philippa was interred at his feet.§ Her figure in alabaster represents her as a most masculine woman. She died in 1369: her royal spouse in 1377. His latter end was marked with misfortunes; by the death of his son the Black Prince; by a raging pestilence; but more by his unseasonable love in his doating years. How finely does Mr. Gray paint his death, and the gay entrance of his successor into power, in the bitter taunt he puts into the mouth of a British bard!

Mighty victor, mighty lord,
Low on his funeral couch he lies!
No pitying heart, no eye, afford
A tear to grace his obsequies.
Is the sable warrior fled?
Thy son is gone: he rests among the dead!
The swarm, that in thy noon-tide beam were born?
Gone to salute the rising morn.
Fair laughs the morn, and soft the Zephyr blows,
While, proudly riding o'er the azure realm,
In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes;
Youth on the prow, and pleasure at the helm;
Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway,
That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening-prey.

THE tomb of the wasteful unfortunate prince RICHARD II. Richard II. and his first consort Anne, daughter of Wenceslaus king of Bohemia, is the next in order.* It was erected by Henry V. Their figures, in the same metal as the former, lie recumbent on it. He had directed them to be made in his life-time, by B. and Godfrey, of Wood-street, goldsmiths: the expence of gilding was four hundred marks. The countenance of Richard is very unlike the beautiful painting of him on board, six feet eleven inches high, by three feet seven inches broad ; in which he is represented sitting in a chair of state, with a globe in one hand, the sceptre in the other ; a crown on his head ; and his dress extremely rich and elegant ; many parts marked with his initial, R. surmounted with a crown. His countenance remarkably fine and gentle, little indicative of his bad and oppressive reign.*

THIS picture, after the test of nearly four hundred years, is in the highest preservation ; and not less remarkable for the elegance of the coloring, than the excellence of the drawing, considering the early age of the performance. It was retouched by Vandyk, and again about the year 1727. The back ground is elevated above the figure, of an uneven surface, and gilt. The curious will find, in Mr. Walpole's Anecdotes, vol. i. an ingenious conjecture respecting the method of painting in that early period, which has given such amazing duration to the labors of its artists. This portrait was originally hung up in the choir of the abbey ; but about a dozen years ago was removed to the Jerusalem chamber.

HENRY V. WITHIN a beautiful chapel of gothic workmanship, of open iron-work, ornamented with various images, is the tomb of the gallant prince Henry V.† a striking contrast to the weak and luxurious Richard. This was built by Henry VII. in compliment to his illustrious relation and predecessor. His queen Catherine had before erected his monument, and placed his image, cut in heart of oak, and covered over with silver, on an altar tomb; the head was (as our learned guide told us) of solid silver, which, in the reign of Henry VIII. was sacrilegiously stolen away. The wooden headless trunk still remains.

* Vetusta Monumenta, tab. iv.

ON each side of this royal chapel is a winding staircase, inclosed in a turret of open iron-work, which leads into a chauntry founded for the purpose of masses, for the repose of the soul of this great prince. The front looks over the shrine of the Confessor. Here is kept a parcel of human figures, which in old times were dressed out and carried at funeral processions; but at present, very deservedly, have obtained the name of the ragged regiment. More worthy of notice is the elegant termination of the columelle of the two staircases, which spread at the top of the turrets into roofs of uncommon elegance.

ON the end of this chauntry rests against that of the chapel of Henry VII. Among the stone statues placed there is the French patron St. Denys, most composedly carrying his head in his hand.

ON the south side of the chauntry, over his monument, is the representation of his coronation.

The face of Henry is distinguished by a wen under his chin; with which it was probably marked, as it is not to be supposed that the sculptor would have added a deformity.*

HIS QUEEN. CATHERINE, his royal consort, had less respect paid to her remains. She had sunk from the bed of the conqueror of France, to that of a common gentleman: yet gave to these kingdoms a long line of princes. She died in 1437, and was interred in the chapel of our lady in this church. When her grandson Henry VII. ordered that to be pulled down, to make room for his own magnificent chapel, he ungratefully neglected the remains of this his ancestress, and suffered them to be flung carelessly into a wooden chest, where they still rest near her Henry's tomb.

EDWARD V. AND HIS BROTHER. NEXT is the cenotaph of the two innocents, Edward V. and his brother Richard duke of York. In the reign of Charles II. certain small bones were found in a chest under a staircase in the Tower. These, by order of Charles, were removed here; and, under the supposition of their belonging to the murdered princes, this memorial of their sad fate was erected, by order of that humane monarch, after a design by Sir Christopher Wren.†

* Mr. Carter intends to engrave this in his specimens of antient sculpture.

† Parentalia, 333.

IN order of time I must pass into the beautiful chapel of Henry VII. nearly the rival in elegance with that of King's College, Cambridge. Who can look at the roof of either without the highest admiration! Henry, finding the chapel of the Confessor too much crowded to receive any more princes; determined on the building of this. That of the Virgin was sacrificed to it; also an adjacent tavern, distinguished by the popular sign of the White Rose. Abbot Islip, on the part of the king, laid the first stone, on February 11th, 1503. The royal miser scrupled no expence in this piece of vanity. By his will it appears, that he expressly intended it as his own mausoleum, and that of his house, intending that none but the blood royal should be interred in this magnificent foundation. It was built at the expence of fourteen thousand pounds.* In the body of this chapel is his superb tomb, the work of Pietro Torregiano, a Florentine sculptor; who had, for his labor and materials, one thousand pounds. This admirable artist continued in London till the completion of his work in 1519. But the reigning prince and Torregiano were of tempers equally turbulent, so they soon separated.† To him is attributed the altar tomb of Margaret countess of Richmond, with her figure recumbent in brass. Henry VII.

had made a special provision in his will for this tomb,* for the images and various other ornaments, which were to decorate this his place of rest. The tomb itself is, as he directed, made of a hard Basaltic stone, called in the language of those days Touche. The figures contained in the six bas reliefs in brass on the sides, are strong proofs of the skill of the artist. They suit the superstition of the times: St. Michael and the devil, joined with the Virgin and Child: St. George with St. Anthony and his pig: St. Christopher, and perhaps St. Anne: Edward the Confessor, and a Benedictine monk: Mary Magdalen, and St. Barbara: and several others. One pretence is a respect to his grand-mother, whose bones he left flung into an ordinary chest. He and his quiet neglected queen lie in brass on an altar tomb within the beautiful brazen precinct; his face resembles all his portraits. I have seen a model, a still stronger likeness, in possession of Mr. Walpole; a bust in stone taken from his face immediately after his death. A stronger reluctance to quit the possessions of this world could never be expressed on the countenance of the most griping mortal.

touched with the same tormenting passion. The long and undeserved sufferings of Mary, from one of her own sex, a sister princess, from whom she had reason to expect every relief, make us forget her crime, and fling a veil over the fault of distressed, yet criminal beauty.

JAMES TO GEORGE II.

THE peaceful pedant James I., his amiable Henry, and the royal rakish Charles, the second of the name; the sullen mis-treated hero William, his royal consort the patient Mary; Anne, glorious in her generals, and George II. repose within the royal vault of this chapel. No monument blazons their virtues; it is left to history to record the busy and often empty tale of majesty. George I. was buried at Hanover; his son caused a vault to be made in this for himself, his Caroline, and family, and directed the side-board of her coffin, and that of his own (when his hour came) to be constructed in such a manner as to be removed, so that their loving dust might intermingle.

I SHALL drop these subjects of mortality, with pointing out a single monument of inferior note. A very fine figure of Time, executed in Italy, in white marble, holds in his hand a scroll, with an inscription of uncommon elegance, written by Doctor Friend, to commemorate the premature death of the honorable Philip Carteret, younger son of George Lord Carteret, at the age of 19, in the year 1710. Time thus seems to address himself to him : *

Et mei falcis subitò recisum

At the dissolution, this great monastery, the second mitred abby in the kingdom, underwent the common lot of the religious houses. In 1534, the abbot, William Benson, subscribed to the king's supremacy, and in 1539 surrendered his monastery into the royal hands, and received as a reward the office of first dean to the new foundation, consisting of a dean and twelve prebendaries. It was also erected into a bishoprick, but the only bishop was Thomas Thirleby; it being suppressed in 1550, on his translation to Norwich.

WHEN the protector Somerset ruled in the fullness of power, this magnificent, this sacred pile narrowly escaped a total demolition. It was his design to have pulled it down, and to have applied the materials towards the palace he was then erecting in the Strand, known by the name of Somerset-house. He was diverted from his design by a bribe of not fewer than fourteen manors.—Mortals should be very delicate in pronouncing the vengeance of Heaven on their fellow-creatures: yet, in this instance, without presumption, without superstition, one may suppose his fall to have been marked out by the Almighty, as a warning to impious men. He fell on the scaffold on Tower-hill, lamented only because his overthrow was effected by a man more wicked, more ambitious, and more detested than himself. In their ends there was a consent of justice: both died by the ax: and both of their headless bodies were flung, within a very short space of time, into the same place, among the attainted herd.

IN the reign of queen Mary, the former religion of the place experienced a brief restoration. She with great zeal restored it to the antient conventual state : collected many of the rich habits and insignia of that splendid worship ; established fourteen monks, and appointed for their abbot John Feckenham, a man of great piety and learning, who, on his expulsion in the succeeding reign, finished his days in easy custody in Wisbech castle.

IN 1560 it was changed into a collegiate church, consisting of a dean, and twelve secular canons, and thirty petty canons, and other members, two school-masters, and forty king's or queen's scholars, twelve almsmen, and many officers and servants.* But there seems to have been a school there from the first foundation of the abbey. Ingulphus, abbot of Crowland, speaks of his having been educated at it ; and of the disputations he had with the queen of the Confessor, and of the presents she made him in money in his boyish days.†

CLOISTERS. BESIDES the church, many of the antient appendages remain. The cloisters are entire, and filled with monuments. The north and west cloisters were built by abbot Littlington, who died in 1386 : he also built the granary, which was afterwards the dormitory of the king's scholars; of later years rebuilt.

THE entrance into the chapter-house (built in 1250) is on one side of the cloister, through a most rich and magnificent gothic portal, the mouldings most exquisitely carved: this is divided into two gothic doors. The room is an octagon, each side of which had most superb and lofty windows, which being now filled up, it is lighted by smaller ones. The opening into this room is as noble as that from the cloister. The stone roof is destroyed, and one of plank is substituted. The central pillar remains, light, slender, and elegant, surrounded by eight others; bound by two equidistant fasciæ, and terminated in capitals of beautiful simplicity. By consent of the abbot, in 1377, the commons of Great Britain first held their parlements in this place; the crown undertaking the repairs. Here they sat till the year 1547, when Edward VI. granted the chapel of St. Stephen to their use. It is at present filled with the public records, among which is the original Domesday book, now above seven hundred years old: it is in as fine preservation as if it was the work of yesterday.

HOUSE.

BENEATH the chapter-house is a very singular crypt. The roof, which forms the floor of the former, is supported by a short round pillar, quite hollow. The top spreads into massy plain ribs, the supports of the roof. The walls are not less than eighteen feet thick, and form a most firm base to the superstructure. They had been pierced with several small windows, which are now lost by the vast increase of earth on the outside;* one is just visible in the garden belonging to Mr. Barrow.

JERUSALEM
CHAMBER.

THE Jerusalem chamber formed a part of the abbot's lodgings; and was built by Littlington. It is noted for having been the place where Henry IV. breathed his last: he had been seized with a swoon while he was praying before the shrine of St. Edward: and, being carried into this room, asked, on recovering, where he was? Being informed, he answered, (I will give his reply in the words of Shakespeare, borrowed from history)

Laud be to God!—even there my life must end.
It hath been prophesied to me many years
I should not die but in Jerusalem,
Which vainly I suppos'd the HOLY LAND!

The devil is said to have practised such a delusion on pope Sylvester II. having (on consultation) assured his holiness that he should die in Jerusalem; and kept his word, by taking him off as he was saying mass, in 1003, in a church of that name in Rome.†

I OMITTED to mention the revenues of this great house, which, in its monastic state, Speed makes to amount to 3977*l.* per ann. Dugdale to 3471*l.*

NOT far from the abby stood the Sanctuary, SANCTUARY. the place of refuge absurdly granted, in old times, to criminals of certain denominations. The church belonging to it was in form of a cross, and double; one being built over the other. Such is the account that Doctor Stukely gives of it, for he remembered it standing:* it was of vast strength; and was with much labor demolished. It is supposed to have been the work of the Confessor. Within its precincts was born Edward V.; and here his unhappy mother took refuge, with her younger son Richard, to secure him from his cruel uncle, who had already possession of the elder brother. Seduced by the persuasions of the duke of Buckingham, and Thomas Scott alias Rotherham, archbishop of York, she surrendered the little innocent, who was instantly carried to his brother in the Tower, where they were soon after involved in one common fate.

To the west of the sanctuary stood the Eleemosynary or Almshouse, ELEEMOSYNARY. where the alms of the abby were wont to be distributed. But it is still more remarkable for having been the place where the first printing press ever known in England was erected. It was in the year 1474, when William

* Archaeologia, i. p. 39.

Carton, probably encouraged by the learned Thomas Milling, then abbot, produced The Game and Play of the Chesse, the first book ever printed in these kingdoms. There is a slight difference about the place in which it was printed, but all agree that it was within the precincts of this religious house. Would the monks have permitted this, could they have foreseen how certainly the art would conduce to their overthrow, by the extension of knowledge, and the long-concealed truths of Christianity?

ST. MARGA-RET'S
CHURCH.

BENEATH the shadow of the abby stands the church of St. Margaret, built originally by Edward the Confessor. The parish church had been in the abby, to the great inconveniency of the monks. It was rebuilt in the time of Edward I. and again in that of Edward IV. This church is honored with the remains of the great Sir Walter Raleigh, who was interred here on the same day on which he was beheaded in Old Palace Yard. It was left to a sensible churchwarden to inform us of the fact, who inscribed it on a board about twenty years ago.

ITS FINE
WINDOW.

THE east window is a most beautiful composition. It was made by order of the magistrates of Dort, and by them designed as a present to Henry VII.; but he dying before it was finished, it was put up in the private chapel of the abbot of Waltham at Copt-hall: there it remained till the dissolution; when it was removed to Newhall in Essex, afterwards part of the estate of general Monk, who preserved it from demolition. In 1758 it was purchased from the then owner, by the inhabitants of this parish, for four hundred guineas. By a most absurd and tasteless opposition, this fine ornament ran a great risque of being pulled down again. The subject is the crucifixion: a devil is carrying off the soul of the hardened thief; an angel receiving that of the penitent. Silly enough! but the other beauties of the piece might surely have moved the reverend zealot to mercy. The figures are numerous, and finely executed. On one side is Henry VI. kneeling; above him his patron saint, St. George. On the other side is his queen in the same attitude, and above her the fair St. Catherine with the instruments of her martyrdom. This charming performance is engraved at the expence of the Society of Antiquaries.

THE royal palace which claims seniority in our capital, was that of Westminster, founded by the Confessor, who was the first prince who had it in regular residence. It stood near the Thames: the stairs to it on the river still keep the name of Palace stairs; and the two Palace Yards also belonged to this extensive pile.

THE New Palace Yard is the area before the hall. In old times a very handsome conduit, or, as it was called, fountain, graced one part: and opposite to the hall, on the site of the present passage into Bridge-street, stood a lofty square tower, which, from its use, was called the Clock Tower. This may be seen in Hollar's print, N° 6, and in the old plan of London, as it was in the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth.

WESTMIN-STER-HALL.

MANY parts of this adjacent palace exist to this day, sunk into other uses. Succeeding monarchs added much to it. The great hall was built by William Rufus, or possibly rebuilt; a room of that description being too necessary an appendage to a palace, ever to have been neglected. The entrance into it from New Palace Yard, was bounded on each side by towers,* most magnificently ornamented with numbers of statues in rows above each other, now lost, or concealed by modern buildings: a mutilated figure of an armed man, supposed to have been one, was discovered under the Exchequer staircase in 1781.† The size may be estimated, when we are told that Henry III. entertained in this hall, and other rooms, six thousand poor men, women, and children, on new-year's day, 1236. It became ruinous before the reign of Richard II. who repaired it in 1397, raised the walls two feet, altered the windows, and added a new roof, as well as a stately porch and other buildings. The expence was paid by a levy on banished strangers, or refugees, who had sought an asylum in England.* In 1399 he kept his Christmas in it, with his characteristical magnificence. Twenty-eight oxen, three hundred sheep, and fowls without number, were daily consumed. The number of his guests each day were ten thousand. We need not wonder then, that Richard kept two thousand cooks. They certainly were deeply learned in their profession; witness the Forme of Cury, compiled about 1390, by the master cooks of this luxurious monarch, in which are preserved receipts for the most exquisite dishes of the time. This book was printed by the late worthy Gustavus Brander, esq; with an excellent preface by that able antiquary the reverend Doctor Pegge. Mr. Brander favored me with a copy; but excepting a magician of Laputa could conjure up a few of Richard's cooks, I despair of ever treating my brethren with a foast à l'antique.

THIS room exceeds in dimensions any in Europe, which is unsupported by pillars; its length is two hundred and seventy feet; the breadth seventy-four. Its height adds to its solemnity. The roof consists chiefly of chesnut wood, most curiously constructed, and of a fine species of gothic. It is every where adorned with angels supporting the arms of Richard II. or those of Edward the Confessor ; as is the stone moulding that runs round the hall, with the hart couchant under a tree, and other devices of Richard II.

PARLEMENTS
HELD IN IT.

PARLEMENTS often sat in this hall. In 1397, when, in the reign of Richard II. it was extremely ruinous, he built a temporary room for his parlement, formed with wood, and covered with tiles. It was open on all sides, that the constituents might see every thing that was said and done ; and, under the pretence of securing freedom of debate, he surrounded the house with four thousand Cheshire archers, with bows bent, and arrows nocked ready to shoot.* This fully answered the intent : for every sacrifice was made to the royal pleasure.

COURTS OF JUSTICE.

COURTS of justice, even in early times, sat in this hall, where monarchs themselves usually presided ; for which reason it was called Curia Domini Regis, and one of the three now held in this hall is called the court of king's bench. Originally the Communia placita followed the king's court wheresoever it happened to be. The king presided in person, and was attended by his judges : he sate on an elevated seat, and the judges on a bench below to assist him with their advice.

* Stow's Survaie, 888, 889.

Madox enumerates many of the palaces,* in the great hall of which the monarchs presided, and he specifies the business done. This was found an inconveniency to the subjects, who were obliged to follow the court to great distances to obtain justice. The Magna Charta made provision against the grievance in the xxiid article. “Communia placita non sequantur curiam nostram, sed teneantur in aliquo certo loco:” and Westminster-hall was the place appointed, as being within the first and chief palace of our kings. But Edward I. in his 28th year obtained a statute, directing, in the following curious law french, that the law courts should follow him wheresoever he went, that he might receive the benefit of their assistance. “Dautre part le roi voet qe le chaunceliere e les justices de soen banc lui suivent issint qil eit touz jours pres de lui ascuns sages de la lei, qui sachent les buoignes qe viegment a la curt, duement deliverer a tote les foiz qe mester serra.”† the lord high chancellor sits during term. We have no account of the person who first filled the office. Unwona, chancellor to king Offa, who began his reign in 758, is the first named. The first after the conquest, in 1067, was Maurise, afterwards bishop of London. Till about 1559 this high office was mostly filled by churchmen. Their place of sittings was at a long marble table, to which was an ascent of five or six steps: the chancellor himself sat in a marble chair fixed in the wall opposite to the middle of the marble table. These were remaining in Dugdale's time,* but even then covered with the courts there erected. They are now lost; probably removed when the courts were in the last reign altered by Kent: at present one part is the repository of the gowns, the other of the wigs, of the numerous counsel.

KING'S BENCH.

THE next court is that of the king's bench, the antient Curia Domini Regis. The justiciarius Angliæ presided when the king did not. On the suppression of this office, in the year 1267, the name was changed to capitalis justiciarius, and the first chief justice was Robert de Brus.† Let me mention here the high antiquity of monarchs themselves discharging the glorious office of attending in person to the rights of their subjects, the prince being the fountain of justice, as well as

* Orig. judiciales, 37.

of honor. Augustus is recorded to have administered justice in person, and sometimes to have set up all night for that purpose. Our Saxon monarchs continued the custom; and after them the English for a very long period.

THE common-pleas is the third court of justice held in this hall. The first chief justice was Gilbert de Preston, appointed in 1233.* In respect to the court of exchequer, it is held in a room adjacent to the hall. This court was erected by William the Conqueror, for tryals respecting the revenues; but afterwards for all matters of equity between subject and subject. Originally a certain number of lords spiritual and temporal sate. The supreme judge is now called chief Baron, and the others the puisse Barons.

COMMON-PLEAS.

THE judges of the courts were made knights bannerets; Walter de Clopton, chief justice of the king's bench, and Robert de Cherleton, chief justice of the common pleas, received the honor of knighthood as bannerets at Windsor on the feast of St. George, in the year 1387,† and had materials given them for making most sumptuous habits for the occasion. Among others, they had for a cloak cxx bellies of minever gross, i. e. the ermine, which they retain to this day; but green appears to be the predominant color of their robes.

* Orig. judiciales, 29.

† The same, 103.

In respect to furs I may observe, that in 1360, on a like occasion, two judges of the common pleas had their cloaks of minever pure. The judges in old times rode to court: at first on mules; but in the reign of queen Mary they changed those restive animals for easy pads, Sir John Whiddon, a justice of the court of king's bench, first setting the example.

CHARLES I.
TRIED HERE.

The solemn trial of Charles I. was held in this hall, before a packed court of judicature: during the intervals of this mockery of justice, he was carried to the neighboring house belonging to Sir Thomas Cotton, in which a room was fitted up by Mr. Kinnersley, a servant of the king's, belonging to the wardrobe.* This was the residence of his father Sir Robert, the famous antiquary, and owner of the noble collection of manuscripts, which, with great public spirit, he got together and secured for ever to the use of his country. They were at first kept in Cotton-house, which was purchased by the crown. They were afterwards removed to another house in Westminster, and finally deposited in the British Museum. Let me add, that the room in which the books were originally lodged, had been the oratory of Edward the Confessor.

IN this hall was carried on the important trial of the great earl of Strafford. I mention it, to shew the simplicity of one part of the manners of the times. The commons, who had an inclosed place for themselves, at a certain hour pulled out of their pockets bread and cheese, and bottles of ale; and, after they had eat and drank, turned their backs from the king, and made water, much to the annoyance of those who happened to be below.* His lordship was brought into the hall by eight o'clock in the morning.

THE house of lords† is a room ornamented with the tapestry which records our victory over the Spanish Armada. It was bespoken by the earl of Nottingham, lord high admiral, and commander in chief on the glorious day. The earl sold it to James I. The design was drawn by Cornelius Vroom, and the tapestry executed by Francis Spiering. Vroom had a hundred pieces of gold for his labor. The arras itself cost 1628*l.* It was not put up till the year 1650, two years after the extinction of monarchy, when the house of lords was used as a committee-room for the house of commons. The heads of the naval heroes who commanded on the glorious days, form a matchless border round the work, animating posterity to emulate their illustrious example!

PRINCE'S
CHAMBER.

IN the Prince's chamber, where his majesty puts on his robes when he comes to the house of lords, is a curious old tapestry, representing the birth of queen Elizabeth. Anne Bullen in her bed; an attendant on one side, and a nurse with the child on the other. The story is a little broken into by the loss of a piece of the Arras, cut to make a passage for the door. But beyond is Henry with his courtiers; one of whom seems dispatched to bring back intelligence about the event. On the south side of this room are three gothic windows.

COURT OF REQUESTS.

THE court of requests is a vast room modernised; at present a mere walking-place. The outside of the south end shews the great antiquity of the building, having in it two great round arches, with zigzag mouldings, our most antient species of architecture. This court has its name because the masters of it here received the petitions of the subjects to the king, in which they requested justice; and advised the suppliants how they were to proceed.*

BER.

taken from the stars with which its roof is said to have been painted, (which were obliterated even before the reign of queen Elizabeth,) but from the Starra,* or Jewish covenants, which were deposited there by order of Richard I., in chests under three locks. No starr was allowed to be valid except found in those repositories: here they remained till the banishment of the Jews by Edward I. In the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. a new-modelled court was erected here, consisting of divers lords spiritual and temporal, with two judges of the courts of common law, without the intervention of a jury.† The powers of this court were so shamefully abused, and made so subservient to the revenge of a ministry, or the views of the crown, as to be abolished by the reforming commons in the 16th of Charles I.,‡ to the great joy of the whole nation. I am informed that it was situated on the south side of New Palace Yard, in the old building§ still remaining on the banks of the Thames.

used as the place of conference between the lords and commons. It makes a very poor appearance, being hung with very antient French or Arras tapestry,* which, by the names worked over the figures, seems to relate to the Trojan war. The windows are of the antient simple gothic. On the north outside, beyond the windows, are many marks of recesses, groins, arms, on the remains of some other room.

NUMBERS of other great apartments are still preserved on each side of the entrance into Westminster-hall, in the law court of exchequer, and adjacent: and the same in the money exchequer, and the dutchy of Lancaster: all these were portions of the antient palace.

AT the foot of the staircase is a round pillar, having on it the arms of John Stafford, lord treasurer from 1422 to 1424. On the opposite part are the arms of Ralph lord Botelar, of Sudley, treasurer of the exchequer in 1433.†

conspirators of 1605 lodged the barrels of gunpowder, designed at one blow to annihilate the three estates of the realm in parlement assembled. To this day, the manner in which Providence directed the discovery is unknown. The plot evidently was confined to a few persons of desperate zeal and wickedness: they did not dare to trust so dreadful a design to the multitude. The success, they knew, must be followed with a general insurrection, and completion of their wishes. The opportunity would have been too irresistible, even to those who, in cool blood, would have rejected with horror a plan so truly diabolical.

THE commons of Great Britain hold their assemblies in this place, which was built by king Stephen, and dedicated to his namesake the proto-martyr. It was beautifully rebuilt by Edward III. in 1347,* and by him made a collegiate church, and a dean and twelve secular priests appointed.† Soon after its surrender to Edward VI. it was applied to its present use. The revenues at that period were not less than 1085*l.* a year.

the court of requests; it consists of the sharp-pointed species of gothic. Between it and the lobby of the house is a small vestibule of the same sort of work, and of great elegance. At each end is a gothic door, and one in the middle, which is the passage into the lobby. On the south side of the outmost wall of the chapel appear the marks of some great gothic windows, with abutments between; and beneath, some lesser windows, once of use to light an under-chapel. The inside of St. Stephen's is adapted to its present use, and plainly fitted up.

SUB-CHAPEL. THE under-chapel was a most beautiful building: the far greater part is preserved, but frittered into various divisions, occupied principally by the passage from Westminster-hall to Palace Yard.

BUST OF

IN the passage stood the famous bust of Charles I. by Bernini, made by him from a painting by Vandyck, done for the purpose. Bernini is said, by his skill in physiognomy, to have pronounced from the likeness, that there was something unfortunate in the countenance.

THE far greater part of the under-chapel of St. Stephen is possessed by his grace the duke of Newcastle, as auditor of the exchequer.* One

* During the time that Mr. Addington, now viscount Sidmouth, was Speaker, the commons voted that most of these apartments should be appropriated to his use, and that of his successors in office. Various improvements have taken place, particularly since the ho-side of the cloister is entirely preserved, by being found convenient as a passage: the roof is gothic, so elegant as not to be paralleled even by the beautiful workmanship in the chapel of Henry VII. Several parts are walled up for the meanest uses; a portion serving, with its rich roof, for a coal-hole. That which has the good fortune to be allotted for the steward's room, is very well kept.

BEAUTIFUL
CLOISTER.

ON one side of the cloister, projects into the area a small oratory, as richly ornamented as other parts of this building: above is a neat chauntry in the same style. A gallery runs over each side of the cloister, with windows of light stone tracery, looking into the court or area, which is deformed by a modern kitchen and its appendages.

TORY AND CHAUNTRY.

FROM one part of the gallery are stairs, which lead to a very antient square tower of stone, standing almost close to the side of Westminster-hall. It probably was a belfry, to hold the bells that roused the holy members of the chapel to prayer.

IN what is called the grotto room, are fine remains of the roof and columns of this sub-chapel.

SCULPTURES
OF ST. STE-PHEN.

norable Charles Abbot has been advanced to the chair, which he fills so worthily. His eating-room is immediately under the chapel. The belfry has been converted into a handsome staircase, leading to some spacious rooms, two of which are fitted up as a gallery for the reception of portraits of Speakers of the House of Commons from the time of Sir Thomas More in 1523 to the present day. ED.

The roof is spread over with ribs of stone, which rest on the numerous round pillars that compose the support. The pillars are short ; the capitals round and small, with a neat foliage intervening. In a circle on the roof is a martyrdom of St. Stephen, cut in stone. In another circle, is a representation of St. John the Evangelist cast into a cauldron of boiling oil, by command of the emperor Domitian.

I CANNOT but remark the wondrous change in the hours of the house of commons, since the days in which the great earl of Clarendon was a member : for he complains “ of the house keeping “ those disorderly hours, and seldom rising till “ after four in the afternoon.”*

WOOL-STAPLE.

NOT far from Westminster-hall, in New Palace Yard, stood the staple of wool, removed to Westminster, and several other places in England, in 1353, by Edward III. These had previously been kept in Flanders : but their removal brought great wealth into the kingdom, and a considerable addition to the royal revenue : for the parlement in those days granted to the king a certain sum on every sack exported. Henry VI. had six wool-houses here, which he granted to the dean and canons of St. Stephen's.† The concourse of people, which this removal of the wool-staple to Westminster occasioned, caused this royal village to grow into a considerable town: such is the superiority of commerce. Part of the old gateway to the staple was in being as late as the year 1741, when it was pulled down to make room for the abutment of Westminster bridge.*

THE first stone of that noble structure was laid on January 24th, 1739, by Henry earl of Pembroke, a nobleman, of whom Mr. Walpole says, none had a purer taste in architecture. It was built after the design of Monsieur Labelye, an ingenious architect, a native of Switzerland.† The last stone was laid in November 1747, so that it was eight years and nine months in completing, at the expence of 389,500*l*. Its length is 1223 feet; the number of arches fifteen, that in the center seventy-six feet wide. In this bridge, grandeur and simplicity are united. Fault has been found with the great height of the balustrades, which deny to the passengers a clear view of the noble expanse of water, and the fine objects, especially to the east, which are scattered with no sparing hand. I cannot agree with the happy thought of the French traveller,‡ who assures us, that they were made so high to prevent the suicide to which the English have so strong a propensity, particularly in the gloomy month of November; for, had they been low, how few could resist the charming opportunity of springing over ! whereas at present, the difficulty of climbing up these heights is so great, that the poor hypochondriac has time to cool; and desisting from his glorious purpose, thinks proper to give his days their full length, and end them like a good Christian in his peaceful bed.

TIDE.

THE tide has been known to rise at this bridge twenty-two feet; much to the inconveniency of the inhabitants of the lower parts of Westminster, for at such times their cellars are laid under water; but its height depends much on the force and direction of the wind at the time of flood.

CANON OR CHANNEL
ROW.

BEYOND this palace, to the north, stood some streets and lanes by the water side, distinguished in older times by the residence of some of our nobility. In Canon Row, so named from being inhabited by the canons of the church, but corrupted into Channel Row, was the stately house built by the termagant Anne Stanhope, wife to the protector Somerset; whose dispute, about some point of female precedency, is said to have contributed in some degree to her husband's fall. She left this house to her son Edward earl of Hertford. Here William earl of Derby had, in 1603, a fair mansion; and Henry Clinton earl of Lincoln, another; and in this row, Anne Clifford tells us, that on the first of May, 1589, she was begotten by her most valiant father George earl of Cumberland, on the body of her most virtuous mother Margaret, daughter of Francis earl of Bedford. Astonishing accuracy !

In this part of the town were some other houses of our nobility. In Manchester-court, Canon-row, stood the house of the earls of Manchester. In the remote Tothil-street, stood the houses of lord Grey, and of lord Dacres, mentioned in Norden's map of London, in 1603 ; and in Lea's map, published in 1700, is the earl of Lindsey's house near Old Palace Yard ; of which I find no other account, than that it was inhabited, in 1707, by one of the Dormers, earl of Caernarvon. *

IMMEDIATELY beyond these buildings began the vast palace of Whitehall. It was originally built by Hubert de Burgh earl of Kent, the great, the persecuted justiciary of England, in the reign of Henry III. He bequeathed it to the Black Friars in Holborn, and they disposed of it to Walter de Grey archbishop of York, in 1248. It became for centuries the residence of the prelates of that see, and was styled York-house. In it Wolsey took his final leave of greatness. The profusion of rich things ; hangings of cloth of gold and of silver ; thousands of pieces of fine Holland ; the quantities of plate, even of pure gold, which covered two great tables,* (all of which were seized by his cruel rapacious master) are proofs of his amazing wealth, splendor, and pride. Henry became possessed of it about the year 1529, by the forfeiture of his fallen servant: the antient palace of Westminster having some time before suffered greatly by fire. From this time it became the residence of our princes, till it was almost wholly destroyed by the same element in 1697.

HENRY was an uncommon composition: his savage cruelty could not suppress his love of the arts: his love of the arts could not soften his savage cruelty. The prince who could, with the utmost sang froid, burn Catholics and Protestants, take off the heads of the partners of his bed one day, and celebrate new nuptials the next, had, notwithstanding, a strong taste for refined pleasures. He cultivated architecture and painting, and invited from abroad artists of the first merit.

FINE GATE. Holbein designed the most beautiful gate at Whitehall, built with bricks of two colors, glazed, and disposed in a tessellated fashion. The top, as well as that of an elegant tower on each side, was embattled. On each front were four busts in baked clay, in proper colors, which resisted to the last every attack of the weather: possibly the artificial stone revived in this century. These I have been lately informed, are preserved in private hands. This charming structure fell a sacrifice to conveniency within my memory:* as did another in 1723, built at the same time, but of far inferior beauty.† The last blocked up the road to King-street, and was called King's-gate. Henry built it as a passage to the park, the tennis-court, bowling-green, the cock-pit, and tilting-yard; for he was extremely fond of athletic exercises; they suited his strength and his temper.

* See Fiddler's Life of Wolsey, 497.

It was the intention of William duke of Cumberland, to rebuild the beautiful gate, first mentioned, at the top of the long walk at Windsor, and for that purpose he had all the parts and stones numbered; but unfortunately the design was never executed.‡

THE tilt-yard was equally the delight of queen TILT-YARD.
Elizabeth, as singular a composition as her father:

* It was taken down in 1750. Ed.

† Both these gates are engraven in plates xvii. xviii. of the Vetusta Monumenta, published by the Society of Antiquaries—and also by Kip.

‡ The editor of Smith's Antiquities of Westminster stigmatises the above description as "vague and superficial;" the candid reader will probably think it sufficient for a work of a general nature. This captious writer adds, however, little to our information, except that three of the busts, supposed to represent Henry VII. Henry VIII. (when a youth), and Fisher bishop of Rochester, are in the possession of Mr. Wright at Hatfield-Priory near Witham; and that the gate was composed of small square stone and flint boulder, and not of brick. ZABETH.

she had vast violence of temper; but with the truest patriotism, and most distinguished abilities, were interwoven the greatest vanity, and most romantic disposition. Here, in her sixty-sixth year, with wrinkled face, red perriwig, little eyes, hooked nose, skinny lips, and black teeth,* she could suck in the gross flatteries of her favored courtiers. Essex (by his squire) here told her of her beauty and worth. A Dutch ambassador assured her majesty, that he had undertaken the voyage to see her majesty, who for beauty and wisdom excelled all other beauties in the world. She labored at an audience to make Melvil acknowledge that his charming mistress was inferior in beauty to herself.† The artful Scot evaded her question. She put on a new habit of every foreign nation, each day of audience, to attract his admiration. So fond was she of dress, that three thousand different habits were found in her wardrobe after her death. Mortifying reflection! that such alloys are found in the greatest characters.

SHE was very fond of dancing. I admire the humour she shewed in using this exercise, whenever a messenger came to her from her successor James VI. of Scotland: for Sir Roger Aston assures us, that whenever he was to deliver any letters to her from his master, on lifting up of the hangings, he was sure to find her dancing to a little fiddle, affectedly, that he might tell James, by her youthful disposition, how unlikely he was to come to the throne he so much thirsted after.*

HENTZNER, who visited this palace in 1598, informs us that her royal library was well stored with Greek, Italian, Latin, and French books. Among others, was a little one in her own handwriting, addressed to her father. She wrote a most exceedingly fair hand, witness the beautiful little book, (prayers,) sold at the late dutchess of Portland's sale for 106*l.*, written in five languages, two in English, and one in Greek, Latin, French, and Italian. At the beginning was a miniature of her lover the Duc d'Anjou, at the end one of herself, both by Hilliard: by the first she artfully insinuated that he was the primary object of her devotions. His mother, Catherinè de Medicis, had been told by an astrologer, that all her sons were to become monarchs. Anjou visited England, and was received with every species of coquetry. On the first of January, 1581, in the tilt-yard of this palace, the most sumptuous tournament ever celebrated, was held in honour of the commissioners sent from France to propose the marriage. A banquetting-house, most superbly ornamented, was erected at the expence of above seventeen hundred pounds. "The gallerie adjoining to her majesties house at Whitehall," says the minute Holinshed, "whereat hir person should be placed, was called, and not without cause, the castell or fortresse of perfect beautie!" Her majesty, at the time aged forty-eight, received every flattery that the charms of fifteen could clame. "This fortresse of perfect beautie was assailed by Desire, and his four foster children." The combatants on both sides were persons of the first rank: a regular summons was first sent to the possessor of the castell, with the delectable song, of which this is part:

"Yeeld, yeeld, ô yeeld, you that this fort doo hold,
 "Which seated is in spotless honors feeld,
 "Desires great force, no forces can with hold;
 "Then to Desires desire ô yeeld, ô yeeld."

Which ended, "two canons were fired off, one with sweet powder, and the other with sweet water: and after there were store of prettie scaling ladders, and then the footmen threw floures, and such fansies against the wals, with all such devises as might seeme fit shot for Desire." In the end Desire is repulsed, and forced to make submission: and thus ended an amorous foolery; which, if the reader is endowed with more patience than I am, he may find filling nearly six great pages in the historian aforesaid. *

Two principal heroes of the time were Sir Henry Lee, knight of the garter, the faithful devoted knight of this romantic princess, and George earl of Cumberland. The first had made a vow to present himself armed at the Tilt-Yard, on the 27th of November annually, till he was disabled by age. This gave rise to the annual exercises of arms during the reign. The society consisted of twenty-five of the most distinguished personages about the court. † Among them was Sir Christopher Hatton, and even the lord chancellor, I think Sir Thomas Bromley. Age overtook Sir Henry in the thirty-third year of her majesty: when he retired with great ceremony, and recommended as his successor the famous hero, the earl of Cumberland, of whom I have given an ample account in another place. ‡ Sir Henry, in the year 1590, invested his successor with much form; and in the true spirit of chivalry and romance, in the presence of the queen and the whole court, armed the new champion, and mounted him upon his horse. His own armour he offered at the foot of a crowned pillar, near her majesty's feet: after which he clothed himself in a coat of black velvet pointed under the arm, and instead of a helmet, covered his head with a buttoned cap of the country fashion.* He died aged 80, in the year 1611, and was interred in the once elegant little church of Quarendon, near Aylesbury. It is difficult to say whether that or the tomb is most ruinous. The figure of the knight appears in armour reclining, with one hand supporting his head, the other on his sword; on his neck is a rich collar with the George pendant; his hair is short and curled; his face bearded and whiskered. He lies beneath a rich canopy, supported by suits of armour like antient trophies. The epitaph tells us,

The warres abroad with honnor he did passe,
In courtlie justs his sovereigns knight he was.
Sixe princes he did serve.

In a work which furnished so few architectural subjects for the engraver, I present the reader with the portrait of this venerable knight, taken from an original in the possession of the late Mrs. Sydney Lee, of Chester; who with great politeness obliged me with a reduced copy. He sprang from a Cheshire family, the same which produced the Lees, earls of Lichfield. Sir Henry has by him a large dog, to which he once was indebted for his life. By accident it was left one night in his bed-chamber, unknown to a faithless servant, who entered the room with an intent to rob and murder his master, but was seized on his entrance by the affectionate animal. At Ditchly, the former seat of the Lees, earls of Lichfield, is a fine full length of Sir Henry, and his trusty dog. At the Rev. Mr. Pirral's, in Worcester, is another portrait of this knight, in a bonnet, and rich chain and dress. The motto, Fide et Constantia. The date 1600. Æt. sue 68.

THE other print is one of Sir Henry's associates in the gallant society, Robert earl of Leicester, clad for the tilt-yard, in complete armour.*

ROWLAND WHITE has left us a curious account of the amusements of this reign, and with what spirit her majesty pursued her pleasures as late as her sixty-seventh year. "Her majesty says she is very well. This day she appoints a Frenchman to doe feates upon a rope in the conduit court. To-morrow she hath commanded the bears, the bull, and the ape to be bayted in the tilt-yard. Upon Wednesday she will have solemne dawncing."†

IN the time of James I. Whitehall was in a most ruinous state. He determined to rebuild it in a very princely manner, and worthy of the residence of the monarchs of the British empire. He began with pulling down the banquetting-rooms built by Elizabeth. That which bears the name at present was begun in 1619, from a design of Inigo Jones, in his purest manner; and executed by Nicholas Stone, master-mason and architect to the king: it was finished in two years, and cost seventeen thousand pounds; but was only a small part of a vast plan, left unexecuted on account of the unhappy times which succeeded. The note* will shew the small pay of this great architect. The magnificent design is shewn in a large print engraved by Foudrinier. It was to consist of four fronts, each with an entrance between two fine square towers: within, a large central court and five lesser: between two of the latter, a beautiful circus with an arcade below: the intervening pillars ornamented with caryatides. The length of this palace was to have been 1152 feet, the depth 874.

CIELING.

THE cieling of this noble room cannot be sufficiently admired. It was painted by Rubens, who had three thousand pounds for his work. It is said that he was assisted in the execution by his scholar

* To Inigo Jones, surveyor of the works done about the king's houses, 8s. 4d. per diem, and 46l. per ann. for house-rent, a clerk, and other incidental expences.—Mr. Walpole.

Jordaens. The subject is the apotheosis of James I.; it forms nine compartments; one of the middle, represents our pacific monarch on his earthly throne, turning with horror from Mars, and other of the discordant deities, and as if it were giving himself up to the amiable goddess he always cultivated, to her attendants, Commerce and all the fine arts. This fine performance is painted on canvass, and is in good preservation; but, a few years ago, it underwent a repair by Mr. Cipriani, who, as I am told, had two thousand pounds for his trouble. The present altar-piعة (which is very ill suited to the style of the place) was brought thither from Whitehall, having escaped the fire, and was the gift of queen Anne. Near the entrance is a bust of the royal founder.

LITTLE did James think that he was erecting a pile from which his son was to step from the throne to the scaffold. He had been brought, in the morning of his death, from St. James's across the park, and from thence to Whitehall, where, ascending the great staircase, he passed through the long gallery to his bed-chamber, the place allotted to him to pass the short period before he received the fatal blow. It is one of the smaller rooms marked with the letter A, in the old plan of Whitehall. He was from thence conducted along the galleries and the banquetting-house, through the wall, in which a passage was broken,* to his last earthly stage. This passage still remains, at the north end of the room, and is at present the door to a small additional building of late date. At the time of the king's death, contiguous to the banquetting-house was a large building with a long roof, and a small cupola rising out of the middle.† The late dutchess of Portland did me the honor of shewing to me a rich pearl surmounted with a crown, which was taken out of the ear of the murdered monarch, after his head was struck off.‡

THE banquetting-house has been, many years past, converted into a chapel. George I. appointed a salary of 30*l.* a year to be paid to certain select preachers, to preach here every Sunday.

CABINET OF
CHARLES I.

THE collection of paintings formed by this most accomplished prince, was esteemed the first in Europe. They were kept in a room called the Cabinet-room, in this palace; which was built by order of prince Henry, from a design of Inigo Jones. I have a view of it, and of some of the antient parts of Whitehall which stood next to St. James's park. This building is distinguished by the Venetian window. It stood on the site of the duke of York's house. Vanderdort was appointed keeper, with a salary of 50*l.* a year. On the death of Henry it was confirmed to him by Charles, at the reduced salary of forty. The view is taken from a drawing by Levins, an artist who had worked under Rembrandt. This I owe to the liberality of Dr. Combe.

THE pictures were disposed of by order of the ruling powers. As a proof of his majesty's judgment in collecting, several were sold for a thousand pounds apiece; a price seldom known in these days, when money bears so far less a value.

IN 1680 a complete plan of this great palace was taken by John Fisher, and engtaven by Vertue, in 1747. It appears that it extended along the river, and in front along the present Parlement and Whitchall-street, as far as Scotland Yard; and on the other side of those streets to the turning into Spring Garden, beyond the Admiralty, looking into St. James's Park. The merry king, his queen, the royal brother, prince Rupert, the duke of Monmouth, and all the great officers, and all the courtly train, had their lodgings within these walls; and all the royal family had their different offices, such as kitchens, cellars, pantries, spioeries, cyder-house, bake-house, wood-yards and coal-yards, and slaughter-house. We see among the fair attendants of queen Catherine, many names which make a great figure in Gram- mont, and other chronicles of the time : such as the countess of Castlemaine, Mrs. Kirk, and Mrs. Killebrew. I did not imagine that Nell Gwynne could have any establishment so near to the injured Catherine, till Mr. Pegge's Curialia, part i. p. 58. set me right. I shall give the discovery in his own words : “ I am ashamed to confess I find “ Mrs. Eleanor Gwynne (better known by the “ name of Nell Gwynne) among the LADIES of “ the PRIVY CHAMBER to queen Catherine. “ This was bare-faced enough to be sure ! Had “ the king made a momentary connection with a “ lady of that denomination, the offence might “ have been connived at by the queen ; but the “ placing one of the meanest of his creatures so “ near the queen’s person was an insult that no- “ thing could palliate but the licentiousness of the “ age, and the abandoned character of the lascivious monarch.” Charles thought fit to dignify her (most improperly it must be allowed) with this office : but her residence was in Pall-mall, in the first good house on the left side of St. James’s Square, as we enter from Pall-mall. The back room on the ground floor was (within memory) entirely of looking-glass ; as was said to have been the cieling. Over the chimney was her picture ; and that of her sister was in a third room. This celebrated favorite died in 1691, a true penitent for the frailties of her past life. At the period I mention, this house was the property of Thomas Brand, esq; of the Hoo, in Hertfordshire.

THE other royal favorites had the sanction of offices, such as maids of honor and the like, which, in all ages, like charity, were sure to cover a multitude of sins. In our days we may remember the naked Iphigenia placed near an exalted personage, but her attendance was dispensed with; as I doubt not was the case with the lady in the reign of the profligate Charles.

I must not omit, that from the palace into the Thames were two stairs, one public; the other the privy stairs for the use of majesty alone; the former are still in use, the latter are made up in the old wall adjacent to the earl of Fife's house at Whitehall, but the arch of the portal remains entire. Henry, and his daughter Elizabeth, made all their parties by water or on horseback; but the princess was occasionally mounted on a litter, carried on men's shoulders. Coaches had been introduced into England by Henry Fitzalan earl of Arundel, one of her admirers: but the spirited princess seems to have disdained the use. She rode in a dress of form and magnificence equal to what she appeared in at the drawing-room; but never put on breeches or boots, like the late Czarina; nor yet the equivocal dress of the ladies of the present age.

No one is unacquainted with the noble and commodious improvements which succeeded. The space occupied by the former palace, most part of Privy Garden, is covered with the houses of nobility or gentry, commanding most beautiful views of the river. Among the first (on the site of the small-beer cellar, of which a view is preserved in N° 4. of Hollar's prints of Whitchall) is the house* of the earl of Fife. From his judicious embankment, is a matchless view of its kind, of the two bridges with the magnificent expanse of water, Somerset-house, St. Paul's, and multitudes of other objects less magnificent, but which serve to complete the beautiful scene.

IN the great room is some very fine Gobelins tapestry. I never can sufficiently admire the expression of passions, in two of the subjects; the fine history of Joseph disclosing himself to his brethren, and that of Susanna accused by the two elders. Here are also great numbers of fine paintings by foreign masters; but, as I confine myself to those which relate to our own country, I shall only mention a small three-quarters of Mary Stuart, with her child, an infant, standing on a table before her. This beautiful performance is on marble.

A HEAD of Charles I. when prince of Wales, done in Spain, when he was there in 1625, on his

A PORTRAIT of William earl of Pembroke, lord high chamberlain in the beginning of the reign of Charles I.; a small full-length in black, with his white rod in one hand, his hat in the other, standing in a room looking into a garden. Such is the merit of this piece, that, notwithstanding it is supposed to have been the performance of Jameson the Scotch Van dyck; yet it has been often attributed to the great Flemish painter.*

IN the vacant part of Privy Garden is still to be seen a noble statue in brass of our abdicated monarch, executed by Grinlyn Gibbons, the year before he deserted his throne. The artist received 300*l.* for his performance.

STATUE OF
JAMES II.

THIS statue was placed to the east of a most curious dial, constructed by Francis Hall, alias Line, a jesuit, and set up in 1669. It stood on a pedestal, and consisted of six parts rising one above the other, with multitudes of planes cut on each, which are so many dials subservient to the purposes of geography, astrology, and astronomy. To four of these parts are globes placed on a branch like a chandelier. The description surpasses my powers. I must leave the reader to consult the very scarce book printed by the in-

HORSE-GUARDS.

THE horse-guards had their stables in the place they occupy at this time; but the present building was erected in the reign of his late majesty, after a design, I think, by Vardy: it cost above thirty thousand pounds. I have given a print* of the Horse-guards as they were in the time of Charles II. In it is the merry monarch and his dogs; and in the back view, the banquetting-house, one of the gates, the treasury in its antient state, and the top of the cockpit.

ADMIRALTY-OFFICE.

THE Admiralty-office stood originally in Duke-street, Westminster; but in the reign of king William was removed to the present spot, to the house then called Wallingford-house, I believe from its having been inhabited by the Knollys's, viscounts Wallingford. From the roof, the pious Usher, archbishop of Armagh, then living here with the countess of Peterborough, was prevailed on to take the last sight of his beloved master Charles I. when brought on the scaffold before Whitehall. He sunk at the horror of the sight, and was carried in a swoon to his apartment.

The present Admiralty-office was rebuilt in the late reign, by Ripley: it is a clumsy pile, but properly veiled from the street by Mr. Adams's handsome screen.*

A LITTLE farther to the north stood, in the place now occupied by Scotland-yard, a magnificent palace built for the reception of the Scottish monarchs, whenever they visited this capital. It was originally given by king Edgar to king Kenneth III. for the humiliating purpose of his making to this place an annual journey, for the purpose of doing homage for the kingdom of Scotland, and in after times for Cumberland and Huntingdon, and other fiefs of the crown. Here Margaret, widow of James IV. of Scotland, and sister to Henry VIII. resided for a considerable time after the death of her husband: and was entertained with great magnificence by her royal brother, as soon as he was reconciled to her second marriage with the earl of Angus.

PALACE FOR KINGS OF SCOTLAND.

A LITTLE above stood one of the celebrated memorials of the affection of Edward I. for his beloved Eleanor, being the cross erected on the last spot on which the body rested in the way to the abbey, the place of sepulture. This and all the others were built after the designs of Cavalini. This was destroyed by the religious fury of the reformers. From a drawing communicated to me by Doctor Combe, it appears to have been of an octagonal form, and in an upper stage ornamented with eight figures : but the gothic parts appear far from being rich.

FINE STATUE
CHARLES I.

THE cross was in the next century replaced by a most beautiful and animated equestrian statue in brass, of Charles I. cast in 1683, by Le Sœur, for the earl of Arundel. It was not erected till the year 1678, when it was placed on the present pedestal, the work of Grinlyn Gibbons. The parliament had ordered it to be sold and broke to pieces : but John River, the brazier who purchased it, having more taste or more loyalty than his masters, buried it unmutilated, and shewed to them some broken pieces of brass in token of his obedience. M. d'Archenholz gives a diverting anecdote of this brazier : he says, that he cast a vast number of handles of knives and forks in brass, which he sold as made of the broken statue. They were bought with great eagerness ; by the loyalists, from affection to their monarch ; by the rebels, as a mark of triumph over the murdered sovereign.*

ST. MARY
ROUNCEVAL.

ON the site of part of Northumberland-house, stood the chapel of St. Mary Rounceval, a cell to the priory of Rouncevaux, in Navarre. It was founded by William Marshal earl of Pembroke, in the time of Henry III., and suppressed by Henry V. among the alien priories, but rebuilt by

Edward IV. who fixed a fraternity in it.* In the reign of Edward VI. a grant was made of the site to Sir Thomas Cawarden.†

Not far from hence, opposite to Charing-Cross, HERMITAGE. was an hermitage, with a chapel dedicated to St. Catherine.‡ This, in 1262, belonged to the see of Llandaff; for I find in that year that William de Radnor, then bishop, had leave from the king to lodge in the cloister of his hermitage at Charing, whenever he came to London.§

On the north side of Charing-Cross stand the royal stables, called from the original use of the buildings on their site, the Mews; having been used for keeping the king's falcons, at least from the time of Richard II. In that reign the accomplished Sir Simon Burley, knight of the garter, was keeper of the king's falcons at the Meuse, near Charing-Cross. This office was by Charles II. granted to his son by Nell Gwynne, Charles duke of St. Albans, and the heirs male of his body. In the reign of Henry VIII. the king's horses were kept here. In 1534 a fire destroyed the building, with a great quantity of hay, and several great horses. It was rebuilt in the reigns of Edward VI. and queen Mary. In the year 1732 the present handsome edifice arose.

ST. JAMES'S palace was originally a hospital, ST. JAMES'S PALACE.

founded and dedicated to St. James, by some pious citizens, before the Conquest, for fourteen leprous females: and eight brethren were added afterwards, to perform divine service. It was rebuilt in the time of Henry III. The custody was given to Eton college, by a grant of the 28th of Henry VI. but I am told that the living of Chat-tisham, in Suffolk, was exchanged for it; the college, on this consideration, having resigned it to Henry VIII. At that time its revenue was valued at 100*l. per annum.* On the quarrel between the great earl of Warwick and lord Cromwel, about the cause of the first battle of St. Albans, lord Cromwel, fearing the rage of that violent peer, was at his own desire lodged here, by way of security, by John Talbot earl of Shrewsbury, at that time lord treasurer of England.* It was surrendered to the king in 1531, who founded on its site the present palace, which Stow calls a goodly manor. His majesty also inclosed the park, which was subservient to the amusement of this and the palace of Whitehall. Charles II. was particularly fond of it, planted the avenues, made the canal, and the aviary, adjacent to the Bird-cage-walk, which took its name from the cages which were hung in the trees. Charles, says Cibber, was often seen here, amidst crowds of spectators, feeding his ducks, and playing with his dogs,* and passing his idle moments in affability even to the meanest of his subjects, which made him to be adored by the common people; so fascinating in the great are the habits of condescension!

DUCK-ISLAND was erected into a government, and had a salary annexed to the office, in favor of M. St. Evremond, who was the first and perhaps the last governor:† and the island itself is lost in the late improvements.

DUCK-ISLAND.

AT the south end of Duke-street,* adjacent to this part of the park, is a large house once used for the Admiralty-office (see p. 148). It was first built for lord chancellor Jefferies, and is easily known by a large flight of stone steps which his royal master permitted to be made into the park for the accommodation of his lordship:‡ they terminate above in a small court, on three sides of which stands the house. On the left is the chapel now called Duke-street chapel. In the time of Jefferies, it was the hall in which his lordship heard causes, whenever it was inconvenient for him to go to Westminster-hall or to Lincoln's-inn.

NOR far from hence, where the iron gates, at the bottom of that noble street George-street, are placed, stood a storehouse for the ordinance in the time of queen Mary. I remember a dirty dark passage leading into the park, which preserves its memory, but was corruptly called Story's Gate.

It does not appear that this palace was inhabited by any of our monarchs till after the fire at Whitehall. James I. presented it to his accomplished son Henry, who resided here till his lamented death in 1612. Charles I. was brought here from Windsor, on January 19th,* by the power of the army, which had determined on his death. Some of the eleven days which he was permitted to live were spent in Westminster-hall, and of the nights in the house of Sir Thomas Cotton, adjacent to his place of trial. On the 27th he was carried back to St. James's, where he passed his three last days in exemplary piety. On the 30th he was brought to the place of execution; and walked, unmoved at every insult, with a firm and quick pace, supported by the most lively sentiments of religion.

His son, the bigoted James, sent to the prince of Orange, when he had approached in force near to the capital, a most necessitated invitation to take his lodgings in this palace. The prince accepted it: but at the same time hinted to the frightened monarch that he must leave Whitehall. It was customary to mount guard at both the palaces. The old hero lord Craven was on duty at the time when the Dutch guards were marching through the park to relieve, by order of their master. From a point of honor he had determined not to quit his station, and was preparing to maintain his post; but, receiving the command of his sovereign, he reluctantly withdrew his party and marched away with sullen dignity.*

DURING the reign of king William, St. James's was fitted up for the residence of the princess Anne (afterwards queen) and her spouse prince George of Denmark. From that time to the present it has been regularly the court of our monarchs.

JAMES, the son of James II., who so long made pretensions to the British throne, was born in the room now called the old bed-chamber; at present the anti-chamber to the levee room. The bed stood close to the door of a back-stairs, which descended to an inner court. It certainly was very convenient to carry on any secret design; and might favor the silly warming-pan story, had not the bed been surrounded by twenty of the privy-council, four other men of rank, twenty ladies, besides pages and other attendants. The tale was adopted by party, and firmly believed by its zealots. But, as James proved false to his high trust, and his son shewed every symptom of following his example, there was certainly no such pretence wanting for excluding a family inimical to the interests of the GREAT WHOLE.

UNCREDITABLE as the outside of St. James's may look, it is said to be the most commodious for regal parade of any in Europe. Every one knows that the furniture of this palace is unbecoming the place. Yet in a ramble I once made through the apartments, I saw several portraits of personages remarkable in their day. Among others (in one of the rooms behind the levee rooms) is a small full-length of Henry prince of Wales, son of James I. He is dressed in green, standing over a dead stag, drawing a sword, probably to cut off its head, according to the custom of the chace. A youth, Robert earl of Essex, afterwards the parlementarian general, is kneeling before him ; each of them have hunting horns ; and behind the prince is a horse ; and on the bough of a tree are the arms of England ; and behind the young lord, on the ground, are his own. These are the bearings of the Devereuxes, and prove the mistake of Mr. Granger, and of Mr. Warton, who, in his Life of Sir Thomas Pope, I am told, attributes them to lord Harrington ; but his arms were a fret on a field sable.* Both these young noblemen were honored with the friendship of that accomplished prince, and both educated with him. At Wroxton, the seat of the earl of Guildford, is another picture of the same subject.*

HERE is another small piece, of Arthur, elder brother to Henry VIII., painted very young, with a bonnet on his head. Henry stands by him, and his sister Margaret, of infant ages. This picture is by Mabuse, who visited England in the reign of their father.

This is a copy from Holbein, in small, by Van Lemput, in 1667, taken by order of Charles II. The original was painted on the wall in the privy chamber of Whitehall, and destroyed in the fire of 1697.

George round his neck; and prince Rupert, the garter round his little leg. Death, in the following year, prevented his installation.*

THE diminutive manhood of the dwarf Geoffry Hudson, is to be seen in another picture. He appears less by being represented walking under some very tall trees.

IN the lords old waiting-room is Henry Darnley, in black, tall and genteel. His hand is resting on his brother Charles Stuart, earl of Lenox, dressed in a black gown.

IN another room is Charles II. of Spain, at the age of four, in black, with a sceptre in his hand, strutting and playing the monarch. He was inaugurated in 1665. His reign was unhappy. Spain at no period was in so low, so distressful a condition. His dominions were parcelled out in his life-time: but he disappointed the allies, and, after some struggle, the designation of his will in favor of the house of Bourbon took place.

HERE is to be seen the famous picture by Mabuse, of Adam and Eve. Mr. Evelyn justly remarks the absurdity of painting them with navels, and of introducing a fountain with rich imagery amidst the beauteous wilds of paradise. Raphael, and Michael Angelo, made the same mistake with regard to the navel, on which the learned Sir *Thomas Brown wastes a long page and a half to disprove its possibility.

IN the queen's library (built by queen Caroline, QUEEN'S LIBRARY. and ornamented by Kent) now a lumber-room, I saw a beautiful view from Greenwich park, with Charles I., his queen, and a number of courtiers, walking. And two others, of the same prince and his queen dining in public. And another of the elector palatine and his spouse at a public table; with a carver, looking most ridiculously, a monkey having in that moment reared from the board and seized on his beard. Possibly this feast was at Guildhall, where Frederic was most nobly entertained by the hospitable city, in 1612, when he made the match with the daughter of our monarch, which ended so unhappily for both parties.

To the east of St. James's palace, in the reign of queen Anne, was built Marlborough-house, at the expence of the public. It appears by one of Kip's views of St. James's, published before the existence of this house, that it was erected in part of the royal gardens, granted for that purpose by her majesty. The present duke added an upper story, and improved the ground floor, which originally wanted the great room. This national compliment cost not less than forty thousand pounds.

MARLBOROUGH-HOUSE.

PALL-MALL. IN Pall-mall the duke Schomberg had his house. It was in my time possessed by Astley the painter, who divided it into three, and fitted up the center most whimsically for his own use.

ASSASSINATION OF THYNNE. IN this street was committed the horrid assassination of Thomas Thynne, esq., of Longleat, in February 1681-2, at the instigation of count Corningsmark, a Swedish nobleman of the first rank and fortune, in hopes of gaining lady Elizabeth Ogle, the rich heiress, daughter to Josceline, last earl of Northumberland of the name of Percy, and widow to Henry Cavendish earl of Ogle, son to Henry duke of Newcastle. Thynne was either married or contracted to the lady. The count hoped by the removal of his rival to attain his purpose. He had been in England and made his addresses to her; but not with the success he expected: left the kingdom for a short time, and then returned to put his horrid design in execution. He arrived incognito, and kept himself concealed till the murder was committed. He employed three foreign ruffians whom he had in his service. Thynne was shot by one of them in his carriage. They were all apprehended. The three assassins were tried as principals, were convicted, and executed on the spot on which the murder was committed. The count was tried as accessory, and acquitted, as was said, by the management of the court—the most profligate of its time.

THE gallant earl of Devonshire would have avenged the death of his friend. Coningsmark accepted the challenge, but his conscience prevented him from meeting the earl. Thynne was a most contemptible character, and passed through the world, as is frequent even to this day, by the merit of a great fortune. He was called from that accident Tom of 10,000, from his revenues. His lady must have detested him, for she fled from him into Holland, even before they were bedded. She afterwards* married Charles, sixth duke of Somerset. In Westminster abbey is a vast but ill executed monument in memory of Mr. Thynne. He is represented recumbent: and in front, beneath him, is sculptured the manner of his assassination. On this mass of marble is only a very brief inscription, merely telling that circumstance. Another, not inelegant, was designed; but Sprat, then dean of Westminster, would not suffer it to be used, as containing parts deemed offensive to the reigning powers.

THE space between the palace and Charing-Cross, about the year 1560, appears to have been fields; there being no buildings at that time, except three or four houses on the east side of the present Pall-mall: and a little farther, on the op-

COCKSPUR-
STREET.

By the year 1572, Cockspur-street filled up the space between those houses and Charing-Cross.

PALL-MALL.

Pall-mall was 'also laid out as a walk, or a place for the exercise of the Mall, a game long since disused. The north side was also planted with a row of trees. On the other side was the wall of St. James's park. Charles II. removed it to its present place, planted the park, and made all those improvements which we now see. It was Le Notre, the famous French gardener, the director of taste under Louis XIV., who planned the disposition of the trees. Of late, the French have endeavoured to borrow taste from us. In the days of Charles, the Haymarket, and Hedge-lane, had names; but they were literally lanes, bounded by hedges; and all beyond, to the north, east, and west, was entirely country. In the fine plan of London, published by Faithorne in 1658, no traces of houses are to be met with in the former, except a single one, named the Gaming-house, at the end next to Piccadilly. Windmill-street consisted of disjoined houses; and a windmill, standing in a field on the west side, proves from what its name was derived. All the space occupied by the streets radiating from the Seven Dials, was at that period open ground.

HAYMARKET.
HEDGE-
LANE.

THE Opera-house in the Haymarket was built first by Sir John Vanburgh, but has been much altered and repaired at subsequent periods. The last alteration was made by Mr. Adams, who entirely departed from the original plan; and the inconvenience arising from another change was so great, that the late fire has happily given occasion of removing it in a most effectual manner.

OPERA-
HOUSE.

LEICESTER-square was also unbuilt; but the house of that name is found in the same plan, and on the site of the present. It was founded by one of the Sydneys earls of Leicester. It was for a short time the residence of Elizabeth, daughter of James I. the titular queen of Bohemia, who, on February 13th, 1661, here ended her unfortunate life.* It was successively the pouting-place of princes. The late king, when prince of Wales, after he had quarrelled with his father, lived here several years. His son Frederick followed his example, succeeded him in his house, and in it finished his days. No one is ignorant of the magnificent and instructive museum exhibited in this house by the late Sir ASHTON LEVER.† It was the most astonishing collection of the subjects of natural history ever collected, in so short a space, by any individual. To the disgrace of our kingdom, after the first burst of wonder was over, it became neglected : and when it was offered to the public, by the chance of a guinea lottery, only eight thousand, out of thirty-six thousand, tickets were sold. Finally, the capricious goddess frowned on the spirited possessor of such a number of tickets, and transferred the treasure to the possessor of only two, Mr. Parkinson ; who, by his great attention to, and elegant disposition of the Museum, well merited her favor.*

THE MILI-TARY YARD.

BEHIND Leicester-house stood, in 1658, the Military-yard, founded by Henry prince of Wales, the spirited son of our peaceful James. M. Foubert afterwards kept here his academy for riding and other gentleman-like exercises, in the reign of Charles II. ; which, in later years, was removed into Swallow-street, opposite to the end of Conduit-street. Part is retained for the purpose of a riding-house ; the rest is converted into a work-house for the parish of St. James's.

GERARD-
HOUSE.

A LITTLE beyond stood Gerard-house, the habitation of the gallant Gerard earl of Macclesfield.† It is lost in the street of the same name. The profligate Lord Mohun lived in this street, and his body was brought there after he was killed in the duel with the duke of Hamilton. I have heard that his good lady was vastly displeased at the bloody corse being flung upon the best bed.

* This noble collection, which it is said was offered to the British Museum for a moderate sum, was sold by auction in 1806. The sale lasted thirty-four days. The number of lots, many containing several articles, amounted to four thousand one hundred and ninety-four. Ed.

COVENTRY-house stood near the end of the COVENTRY-HOUSE. Haymarket, and gave name to Coventry-street. It was the residence of lord keeper Coventry; and Henry Coventry, secretary of state, died here in 1686. This house is said to be on the site of one called, in the old plans of London, the Gaming-house.

LORD Clarendon mentions a house of this name, PICCADILLY. in the following words: "Mr. Hyde (says he, "speaking of himself) going to a house called " Piccadilly, which was a fair house for entertainment and gaming, with handsome gravel-walks " with shade, and where were an upper and lower " bowling-green, whither very many of the nobility and gentry of the best quality resorted for " exercise and conversation."* This seems to have been the same house with that mentioned by Mr. Garrard in his letter to the earl of Strafford, dated June, 1635; in which he says, "that since " Spring Gardens was put down, we have, by a " servant of the lord chamberlain's, a new Spring " Gardens erected in the fields beyond the Meuse; " where is built a fair house, and two bowling- " greens made to entertain gamesters and bowlers,

BURLING-
TON-HOUSE.

WHERE Sackville-street was afterwards built, stood Piccadilla-hall, where Piccadillas or Turn-overs were sold, which gave name to that vast street, called from that circumstance Piccadilly. This street was completed, in 1642, as far as the present Berkeley-street. The first good house which was built in it was Burlington-house: the noble founder, father to the late earl of Burlington, said he placed it there “ because he was certain no one would build beyond him.” Nobody is ignorant of the vast town that, since that period, has extended itself beyond this palace. After this rose Clarges-house, and two others adjacent, inhabited, says Strype, by lord Sherbourne and the countess of Denbigh.

CARNABY-
MARKET.

THE Pest-house-field was surrounded with buildings before the year 1700, but remained a dirty waste till of late years, when Carnaby-market occupied much of the west part. The Pest-house was erected for the reception of the infected in the great plague of 1665, and the field the place of the numerous interments.

* Earl of Strafford's Letters, i. 435.

Golden-square, of dirty access, was built after the Revolution, or before 1700. It was originally called Gelding-square, from the sign of a neighboring inn; but the inhabitants, indignant at the vulgarity of the name, changed it to the present.* In these fields was the lazaretto, during the period of the dreadful plague of the year 1665. It was built by that true hero lord Craven, who stayed in London during the whole time; and braved the fury of the pestilence, with the same coolness as he fought the battles of his beloved mistress Elizabeth, titular queen of Bohemia; or mounted the tremendous breach at Creutznach. He was the intrepid soldier, the gallant lover, the genuine patriot.

GOLDEN-SQUARE.

IN 1700 Bond-street was built no farther than the west end of Clifford-street. It took its name from the proprietor, a baronet of a family now extinct. New Bond-street was at that time an open field, called Conduit Mead, from one of the conduits which supplied this part of the town with water: and Conduit-street received its name for the same reason.

BOND-STREET.

GEORGE-street, Hanover-square, and its church, St. George's rose about the same time. The church was built by John James, and finished in 1724. Its portico would be thought handsome were there space to admire it. It now looks Brobdignagian. This was one of the fifty new churches, and the parish stolen out of that of St. Martin in the Fields. It is the last in this part of Westminster, excepting the distant Marybone. Every part besides was open ground covered with dunghills, and all sorts of filth. MAY-FAIR. May Fair was kept about the spot now covered with May-Fair chapel, and several fine streets. The fair was attended with such disorders, riots, thefts, and even murders, that, in 1708, it was presented by the magistrates. It revived again, and I remember the last celebrations: the place was covered with booths, temporary theatres, and every enticement to low pleasure.

At the time of Sir Thomas Wiat's insurrection, in February, 1554, part of the army marched to make their attack on London, over this tract, then an open country as far as Charing-Cross. On the spot called Hay-hill, near the present Berkeley-square, there was a skirmish between a party of the insurgents and another of the royal army, in which the former were repulsed. After the execution of Sir Thomas, his head (on that account) was set up on a gallows, at that place,* and his parboiled quarters in different parts of the neighborhood of the capital. Three of the insurgents were also hung in chains near the head of their leader.

THIS extensive tract, at present a vast seat of the most elegant population, is far from being destitute of places of devotion : but chapels arose instead of churches, subordinate to their respective rectors. In this enlightened age it was quickly discovered that " Godliness was profitable to " many." The projector, the architect, the mason, the carpenter, and the plasterer, united their powers. A chapel was erected, well-pewed, well-warmed, dedicated, un-endowed, un-consecrated. A captivating preacher is provided, the pews are filled, and the good undertakers amply repayed by the pious tenantry.

THE history of Conduit-street chapel, or Trinity chapel, is very remarkable. It was originally built of wood by James II. for private mass, and was conveyed on wheels, attendant on its royal master's excursions, or when he attended his army. Among other places, it visited Hounslow heath, where it continued some time after the Revolution. It was then removed, and enlarged by the rector of the parish of St. Martin's, and placed not far from the spot on which it now stands. Dr. Tennison, when rector of Saint Martin's, got permission from king William to rebuild it: so after it had made as many journies as the house of Loretto, it was by Tennison transmuted into a good building of brick, and has rested ever since on the present site. All parochial duties have been performed from that time without intermission ; and it continued annexed to the parish of Saint Martin's, which sold it about fifteen years ago to Mr. James Robson, the present proprietor, who has modernized the building with a new front, and fitted up the inside with great neatness and propriety.

THE late Carew Mildmay, esq; who, after a very long life, died a few years ago, used to say, that he remembered killing a woodcock on the site of Conduit-street, at that time an open country. He and general Oglethorpe were great intimates, and nearly of the same age ; and often produced proofs to each other of the length of their recollection.

HANOVER
SQUARES.

IN 1716, Hanover-square, and Cavendish-square, were unbuilt : but their names appear in the plans of London of 1720. Oxford-street, from Princes-street eastward as far as High-street St. Giles's, had only a few houses on the north side. I remember it a deep hollow road, and full of sloughs : with here and there a ragged house, the lurking-place of cut-throats : insomuch that I never was taken that way by night, in my hackney-coach, to a worthy uncle's, who gave me lodgings at his house in George-street, but I went in dread the whole way. The south side was built as far as Swallow-street. SOHO-SQUARE was begun in the time of Charles II. The duke of Monmouth lived in the center house, facing the statue. Originally the square was called, in honor of him, Monmouth-square; and afterwards changed to that of King-square. I have a tradition, that, on his death, the admirers of that unfortunate man changed it to Soho, being the word of the day at the field of Sedgemoor.* The house was purchased by the late lord Bateman, and let by the present lord to the Comte de Guerchy, the French ambassador. After which it was let on building leases. The form of the house is preserved by Mr. Nathanael Smith, in the first numbers of the Illustrations of London. The name of the unfortunate duke is still preserved in Monmouth-street.

SOHO-SQUARE.

I AM sorry to degrade the neighboring Greek-street into Grig-street: but authority for doing so, may be found in a date of an old letter in the possession of the late Mr. Edmondson. The mistake ought to be retained, as a most happy one. Mr. Wedgewood vindicates the propriety, by making it the repository† of his figuline ware, founded on the chastest Grecian models, and executed in the truest Attic taste.

BERKELEY-
HOUSE.

AFTER this digression, let me return into Piccadilly.—Before the date of Burlington-house, was built a fine mansion, belonging to the Berkelies, lords, and afterwards earls Berkeley. It stood between the south end of Berkeley-square and Piccadilly, and gave name to the square and an adjacent street. The misery and disgrace which the profligacy of one of the daughters brought on the house, by an intrigue with her brother-in-law, lord *Grey (afterwards engaged in the Monmouth rebellion) is too lastingly recorded in the State Trials, ever to be buried in oblivion.

DEVONSHIRE-
HOUSE.

On the site of this house, fronting Piccadilly, stands Devonshire-house; long after the year 1700 it was the last house in this street, at that time a portion of Piccadilly. In the antient house, Chris- tiana the old countess of Devonshire lived, with her characteristic splendor and hospitality, and died here in 1674. It was the great resort of the wits of her days. Waller made it his theatre, and Denham is said here to have prated more than ever.* I have already celebrated this lady.† The succeeding house, which was erected by the first duke, was burnt in the reign of George II. It was rebuilt by the third duke, after a design by Kent, and cost twenty thousand pounds, including a thousand pounds presented by the duke to Kent for his plans and designs. Here is an excellent library, and a very fine collection of medals. I once saw the house, by the favor of my late friend the Reverend Doctor Lort, at that time librarian; to whose liberal communications I have been invariably indebted. The portraits are so numerous in this noble house, that I must leave the complete list to those who have more opportunities of forming it than I had. Among others, is a fine portrait of Marc Antonio de Dominis, the vain desultory archbishop of Spalatro, who, abjuring the Roman catholic religion, came over to England, and was appointed master of the Savoy, and dean of Windsor. He had not been here long, before he publicly retracted all he had written against the church of Rome. James ordered him to depart the kingdom in three days. He had the folly to trust himself at Rome; where, his sincerity being doubted, he was flung into prison, in which he ended his days. He is painted by Tintoret, represented in his study, sitting, in black, and with a square cap.

SIR Thomas Brown, author of the Religio Medici, his lady, and four daughters, by Dobson. Sir Thomas and his lady are in black; one child is on her lap, two stand before him, on whom he looks with great affection. When I thought of a passage in his famous book, I could not help smiling at the number of his children. His sentiments on the consequences of matrimony are most singular. I dare not quote the passage: but must refer the reader to the strangeness of his ideas on the subject.* Let it be remembered that he was a bachelor when he wrote.

A HEAD of Titian, by himself. And another of the painter Carlo Cignani, also by himself.

THE unfeeling Philip II. by Titian; a full-length, in armour, enriched with gold. The only time he ever buckled it on, was when he shewed himself to his troops going on the assault of St. Quintin. He merited to be stripped of the honorable dress: he never appeared in the field; and carried on his wars like an assassin.

I WILL close this very imperfect list, with the famous countess of Desmond; a popular subject with the painters: and refer the reader to the account I have given of her in my visits to that worthy peer the late earl of Kimmoul, in both my tours in Scotland.

THE collection of pictures by the great Italian masters, is by far the finest private collection now in England.

PICCADILLY is continued nearly half a mile farther to the west:* but the north side only consists of houses, most of them mean buildings : it finishes handsomely with the magnificent new house of lord Bathurst, at Hyde-park Corner. On the south side is the Green-park, bounded by a wall ; but in many places are rows of benevolent railings, which afford a most elegant view of that park, the trees in that of St. James's, the majestic venerable abby soaring far above, and the more remote rural view of the Surry hills. Beyond the Turnpike-house, stood the house of a nobleman, celebrated by Mr. Pope for his passion for dancing ; who demanded an audience from queen Anne, after the death of George prince of Denmark, to advise her majesty to dispel her grief by applying to that exercise :

IN 1733 arose on its site that great charity St. George's hospital, founded by the voluntary contributions of the inhabitants of Westminster. The subscriptions, in 1786, were 2,239*l.* 5*s.*; in the year 1791, 2,262*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*; but the benevolence of the governors, or more numerous accidents, caused an increase of expence, which threatened most serious consequences, till the house was happily relieved by the bounty received from the third of the profits arising from the musical entertainments of the abby.—This hospital has discharged, since it was opened, on the first of the year 1733, to December the 29th, 1790, not fewer than a hundred and seventy-three thousand two hundred and seventeen patients. FORTIFICA-

OPPOSITE to the hospital at Hyde-park Corner, stood a large fort with four bastions, one of the many flung up in the year 1642. It is incredible with what speed the citizens raised a rampart of earth round the city and suburbs of London, also round Southwark and Lambeth, strengthened with batteries and redoubts at proper intervals. This was occasioned by the alarm of an attack from the royal army. Men, women, and children, assisted by thousands. The active part which the fair sex took in the work, is admirably described by the inimitable author of Hudibras; who, says he,

March'd rank and file with drum and ensign,
T' entrench the city for defence in :
Rais'd rampiers with their own soft hands,
To put the enemy to stands ;
From ladies down to oyster-wenchs,
Labour'd like pioneers in trenches,
Fal'n to their pick-axes and tools,
And help'd the men to dig like moles.
Have not the handmaids of the city
Chos'n of their members a committee,

For raising of a common purse,
 Out of their wages to raise horse?
 And do they not as Triers sit,
 To judge what officers are fit?

 mote from St. James's palace, which merit mention. Berkshire-house, belonging to the Howards, earls of Berkshire, stood very near the royal residence. It was afterwards purchased, and presented by Charles II. to that beautiful fury Barbara dutchess of Cleveland, and its honorable name changed into that of her dishonored title.
 It was then of great extent. She sold part, which was converted into various houses; and erected a large one for herself, which still remains, and may be distinguished by the row of round windows in the upper story.

ham-gate: it was built in 1638, by Nicholas Stone, for Alathea countess of Arundel, wife to Thomas earl of Arundel. After the death of the countess it became the property of her second son, the unfortunate William lord Stafford, a most gentle and amiable character, who fell an innocent victim to the detestable violence of party, and the perjured suborned evidence of the ever infamous Oates, Dugdale, and Tuberville. Good men, who had no share in that party, hurried away by intemperate passion, were at the period disgraced

by their rage against this inoffensive peer. Even the virtuous lord Russel committed in this cause the single opprobrium of his life: when the unhappy lord was condemned, RUSSEL could wish to deny the king the amiable prerogative of taking away the cruel, the disgraceful part of the penalty. Within three years, this excellent man himself tasted the bitter cup; but cleared, by royal indulgence, from the aggravating dregs, with which he wished to agonize the dying moments of the devoted Stafford.

HERE were kept the poor remains of the Arundelian collection. They were buried during the madness of the popish plot. The mob would have mistaken the statues for popish saints. They were sold in the year 1720; and the house soon after was pulled down. Mr. Walpole, who saw the house at the time of the second sale, informed me that it was very large, and had a very venerable appearance.

ARLINGTON-
HOUSE.

HENRY BENNET earl of Arlington, one of the famous Cabal, had a house near the site of the present Buckingham-house, which went by his name. It was afterwards purchased by John Sheffield duke of Buckingham, who, after obtaining an additional grant of land from the crown, rebuilt it, in a magnificent manner, in 1703. He describes it most minutely, as well as his manner of living there, in a letter to the duke of Shrews- *bury. He has omitted his constant visits to the noted gaming-house at Marybone, the place of assemblage of all the infamous sharpers of the time. His grace always gave them a dinner at the conclusion of the season, and his parting toast was, May as many of us as remain unhanged next spring, meet here again. I remember the facetious Quin telling this story at Bath, within the hearing of the late lord Chesterfield, when his lordship was surrounded by a crowd of worthies of the same stamp. Lady Mary Wortley thus alludes to the amusements of Marybone:

Some dukes at Marybone bowl time away.

The duke died in 1720. His dutchess, daughter to James II. by Catherine Sedley, lived here till her death. She was succeeded by the duke's natural son, Charles Herbert Sheffield, on whom his grace had entailed it after the death of the young duke, who died a minor. It was purchased from Sir Charles by his present majesty; is the retreat of our good king and queen; and dignified with the title of the QUEEN'S HOUSE. Antiently there was a park at Marybone: for I find that in queen Elizabeth's time, the Russian ambassadors were entertained with the amusement of hunting within its pale.

CLARENDON-
HOUSE.

THE virtuous chancellor the earl of Clarendon, had a house facing the upper end of St. James's-street, on the site of the present Grafton-street. It was built by himself, with the stones intended for the re-building of St. Paul's. He purchased the materials ; but a nation soured with an unsuccessful war, with fire, and with pestilence, imputed every thing as a crime to this great and envied character : his enemies called it Dunkirk-house, calumniating him with having built it with the money arising from the sale of that town, which had just before been given up to the French, for a large sum, by his master. Clarendon was so sensible of his vanity, of his imprudence, in building so large a house, and of the envy it drew upon him, that he thinks fit to apologize for that act ; which he declares so far exceeded the proposed expence, as to add greatly to the embarrassment of his affairs.* It cost fifty thousand pounds, and three hundred men were employed in building it. It was purchased from his lordship by George Monk duke of Albemarle, and afterwards by another nobleman, inferior indeed in abilities, but not inferior in virtues. In 1670, James duke of Ormond, in his way to Clarendon-house, where his grace at that time lived, was dragged out of his coach by the infamous Blood, and his associates, who intended to hang his grace at Tyburn, in revenge for justice done, under his administration in Ireland, on some of their companions. This refinement in revenge saved the duke's life: he had leisure to disengage himself from the villain on horseback, to whom he was tied; by which time he was discovered by his affrighted domestics, and rescued from death. Blood was soon after taken in the attempt to steal the crown. The court had use for so complete a villain, and sunk so low as to apply to his grace to pardon the offence against him; which the duke granted with a generous indignation. Blood had a pension of five hundred a year, and was constantly seen in the presence-chamber: as is supposed, to shew to the great uncomplying men of the time, what a ready instrument the ministry had to revenge any attempt that might be made against them in the cause of liberty.

JERMYN, and St. Alban's streets took their names from the gallant Henry Jermy earl of St. Alban's, who had a house at the head of the latter. He is supposed to have been privately married to the queen dowager, Henrietta Maria. By this time misfortunes had subdued that spirit which had contributed to precipitate her first husband into the ruin of his house. She was awed by her

ST. JAMES'S
CHURCH.

ON the ground of this gay peer, was built the present church of St. James, founded in the latter part of the reign of Charles II. and consecrated in the first of James II. and named in honor of both saint and monarch. London was so vastly increased about this period, that a new church in this place was necessary. Accordingly, as much was taken from the parish of St. Martin in the Fields as was sufficient to form another. It is a rectory, to which, at first, the bishop of London had a right of two turns in the presentation. Lord Jermyn, nephew to the earl, had the third: but the last was fully resigned to the bishop. The most remarkable thing in the church is the fine* font of white marble, the work of Grinlin Gibbons. It is supported by the tree of life; the serpent is offering the fruit to our first parents, who stand beneath: on one side of the font is engraven the Baptist baptizing our Saviour: on another St. Philip baptizing the eunuch: and on the third, Noah's ark, with the dove bringing the olive-branch, the type of peace to mankind.†

some beautiful foliage in wood, by the same great artist.

It is melancholy to recal the memory of departed friends, but here it was inevitable, when I thought on my amiable friend Benjamin Stillingfleet, esquire, whose mortal part is deposited in this church. How many happy hours have I passed with him in the adjacent Piccadilly! I never quitted him without improvement. My gratitude prompted me to draw up, in the preface of my fourth volume of the British Zoology, the following inadequate eulogy on my lamented friend: till a better is offered, let that serve as the monument and epitaph of such uncommon merit.

“ GRATITUDE prompts me to mention a most “ irreparable loss in my amiable friend, Benjamin “ Stillingfleet, esquire, in whom were joined the “ best heart, and the ablest head. Benevolence
“ and innocence were his inseparable companions.
“ Retirement his choice, from the most affection“ ate of motives, that of supporting a distressed “ sister. How great, yet how unnecessary was “ his diffidence in public: how ample his instruc“ tion in private! How clear his information:
“ how delicate the conveyance! The pupil re“ ceived advantage, edified by the humility of the “ master. Thoroughly imbued in divine philo“ sophy, he had an uncommon insight into the “ uses of every object of natural history; and “ gave sanction to those studies which, by trivial “ observers, are held most contemptible. The “ end of his labors was the good of mankind.

 “ He attempted to destroy the false shame that “ attended the devotee to ornithology; the chace “ of the insect; the search after the cockle; or “ the poring over the grass. He proved every “ subject to be of the greatest service to the “ world, by the proper remarks that might be “ made on them: the traveller, the sailor, the “ husbandman might, if they pleased, draw the “ most useful conclusions from them.” He pointed out in the philosophy of nature the most unerring guide.

THE STRAND; ITS AN-
 TIEN STATE. THE further progress of this part of the town I shall defer mentioning till I have reached the most eastern part of Westminster. I shall resume my account at the opening of the Strand into Charing- Cross, by observing, that in the year 1353, that fine street the Strand was an open highway, with here and there a great man's house, with gardens to the water-side. In that year it was so impassable, that Edward III. by an ordinance directed a tax to be raised upon wool, leather, wine, and all goods carried to the staple at Westminster, from Temple-bar to Westminster-abbey, for the repair of the road; and that all owners of houses adjacent to the highway, should repair as much as lay before their doors.* Mention is also made of a bridge to be erected near the royal palace at Westminster, for the conveniency of the said staple;† but the last probably meant no more than stairs for landing goods, which was sometimes called a bridge.

THERE are several grants for building, in this extensive road, in very early times. Edward I. granted to Walter le Barbur, a void space in the high-street, in the parish of St. Clement Danes and St. Mary Strand: and Robert le Spencer had from the same prince another grant.

THERE was no continued street here till about the year 1533: before that time, it entirely cut off Westminster from London, and nothing intervened except a few scattered houses, and a village which afterwards gave name to the whole. St. Martin's stood literally in the fields. But about the year 1560 a street was formed, loosely built; for all the houses on the south side had great gardens to the river, were called by their owners names, and in after-times gave name to the several streets that succeeded them, pointing down to the Thames; each of them had stairs for the conveniency of taking boat, of which many to this day bear the names of the houses. As the court was for centuries, either at the palace at Westminster or Whitehall, a boat was the customary conveyance of the great to the presence of their sovereign. The north side was a mere line of houses from Charing-Cross to Temple-bar; all beyond was country. The gardens which occupied part of the site of Covent-Garden were bounded by fields, and St. Giles's was a distant country village. These are circumstances proper to be noticed, as they shew the vast increase of our capital in little more than two centuries.

IN the same century was a second epoch respecting the buildings of this part of the town. The first was at the time we have mentioned, or, to speak from strong authority, as they appear in the plan of London, made about the year 1562, by Ralph Aggas. Our capital found itself so secure in the glorious government of Elizabeth, that, by the year 1600,* most considerable additions were made to the north of the long line of street just described. St. Martin's-lane was built on both sides. St. Giles's church was still insulated: but Broad-street, and Holborn, were completely formed into streets, with houses all the way to Snow-hill. Covent-garden, and Lincoln's-inn-fields, were built, but in an irregular manner. Drury-lane, Clare-street, and Long-acre, arose in the same period.

THE present magnificent palace, Northumberland-house, stands on the site of the hospital of St. Mary Rounceval. Henry VIII. granted it to Sir Thomas Cooarden. It was afterward transferred to Henry Howard earl of Northampton; who, in the time of James I. built here a house, and called it after his own name. He left it to his kinsman the earl of Suffolk, lord treasurer; and, by the marriage of Algernoon Percy, earl of Northumberland, with Elizabeth daughter of Theophilus earl of Suffolk, it passed into the house of the present noble owner. The greater part of the house was built by Bernard Jansen, an architect in the reign of James I.; the portal, since altered by the late duke of Northumberland, by a cotemporary architect, Gerard Christmas, who left on it his mark, C. Æ.†

HUNGERFORD STAIRS.

In this house is the noble picture of the Cornaro family, by Titian. It is very unfortunate that nothing can be more confined than the situation. The noble front is pent up by a very narrow part of the Strand; and at the back by a cluster of mean houses, coal-wharfs, and other offensive objects, as far as the banks of the Thames. Fortunately, by the favor of government, the power is now obtained of giving the place the most magnificent improvement. The late duke received a lease from the crown of all the intervening ground as far as the river; and, within these very few years, an absolute exchange for certain lands in Northumberland, to erect batteries on against foreign invasion, at the period when the project of universal fortification prevailed. In a short time all nuisances may be removed, and in their stead may be seen to arise a terrace emulating that of Somerset-house: with a view to which the grant is said to have been solicited.

HUNGER-
FORD STAIRS.

A LITTLE farther are Hungerford stairs and market; which take their name from the great family of the Hungerfords of Fairleigh, in Wiltshire. Sir Edward, created knight of the Bath at the coronation of Charles II. had a large house on the site, which he pulled down, and multiplied into several others. On the north side of the market-house is a bust of one of the family in a large wig.

ON the other side of the Strand, almost opposite to Hungerford-market, stands the church of St. Martin in the Fields, once a parish of vast extent; but much reduced at present by taking from it the tract now divided into the parishes of St. James, St. Anne, and St. Paul, Covent-garden. We cannot trace the time of its foundation. It was early bestowed on the abbot and convent of St. Peter, Westminster. In 1222, there was a dispute between the abbot and the city of London, about the jurisdiction of this church. And in 1363, we first find the name of a vicar, in the room of Thomas Skyn, who had resigned.* In the reign of Henry VIII. a small church was built here at the king's expence, on account of the poverty of the parishioners, who probably were at that period very few. In 1607 it was enlarged, because of the increase of buildings. In 1721 it was found necessary to take the whole down; and in five years from that time, the present magnificent temple† was completed, at the expence of nearly thirty-seven thousand pounds. This seems the best performance of Gibbs, the architect of the Ratcliff Library.

A LITTLE beyond Hungerford-market had been of old the bishop of Norwich's inn; but was exchanged in 1535, in the reign of Henry VIII.

for the abby of St. Bennet Holme, in Norfolk. The next year Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, exchanged his house, called Southwark-place, for it. In queen Mary's reign it was purchased by Heath archbishop of York, and called York-house. Toby Matthew, archbishop in the time of James I. exchanged it with the crown, and had several manors in lieu of it. The lords chancellors Egerton and Bacon resided in it : after which it was granted to the favorite Villiers duke of Buckingham, who made it a magnificent house. In 1648 the parliament bestowed it on lord Fairfax ; whose daughter and heir marrying George Villiers, second duke of Buckingham, it reverted again to the true owner, who for some years after the Restoration resided in it. On his disposal of it, several streets were laid out on the site and ground belonging to it. These go under the general appellation of York-buildings ; but his name and title is preserved in George, Villiers, Duke, and Buckingham streets, and even the particle of is not forgotten, being preserved in Of-alley.

DURHAM-
PLACE.

DURHAM-YARD takes its name from a palace, built originally by Anthony de Beck, patriarch of Jerusalem, and bishop of Durham, in the reign of Edward I ; designed by him for his town residence and that of his successors. It was rebuilt by bishop Thomas de Hatfield, who died in 1381. Bishop Tunstal exchanged it with Henry VIII. who made it a palace. Edward VI. gave it for life to his sister Elizabeth: but Mary, considering the gift as sacrilege, granted the reversion to the see of Durham. It was called Durham-place, i. e. palace. Be it known to all whom it concerns, that the word is only applicable to the habitations of princes, or princely persons, and that it is with all the impropriety of vanity bestowed on the houses of those who have luckily acquired money enough to pile on one another a greater quantity of stones or bricks than their neighbors. How many imaginary Parks have been formed within precincts where deer were never seen! and how many houses, misnamed Halls, which never had attached to them the privilege of a manor! At this place, in 1540, was held a most magnificent feast, given by the challengers of England, who had caused to be proclaimed, in France, Flanders, Scotland, and Spain, a great and triumphant justing to be holden at Westminster, for all comers that would undertake them. But both challengers and defendants were English. After the gallant sports of each day, the challengers rode unto this Durham-house; where they kept open household, and feasted the king and queen (Anne of Cleves) with her ladies, and all the court. " In this time of their house-keeping, they had not only feasted the king, queen, ladies, and all the court, as is afore-shewed ; but also they cheered al the knights and burgesses of the common house in the parliament ; and entertained the maior of London, with the aldermen and their wives, at a dinner, &c. The king gave to every of the sayd chalengers, and their heires for ever, in reward of their valiant activity, 100 marks, and a house to dwel in of yeerely revenue, out of the lands pertaining to the hospital of S. Jahn of Jerusalem."*

IN this and part of the following year, is most strongly exemplified the unfeeling heart of this cruel prince. His sudden transitions from nuptials, and joyous festivities, to the most tyrannical executions, often for offences of his own creation. In that small space of time, he married one queen, and put her away, because he thought her a Flanders mare. He espoused another, and (not without cause) put her and the confident to her incontinence to death. He caused to be executed a hopeful young peer, and three young gentlemen, for a common manslaughter resulting from a sudden fray. He burnt numbers for denying the religion of Rome, and inflicted all the barbarous penalties of high treason on multitudes, for denying a prerogative which he had wrested from the pope, the head of that very worship which he supported with such rigour.

IN the reign of Edward VI. the mint was established in this house, under the management of Sir William Sharrington, and the influence of the aspiring Thomas Seymour, lord admiral. Here he proposed to have money enough coined to accomplish his designs on the throne. His practices were detected: and he suffered death. His tool was also condemned; but, sacrificing his master to his own safety, received a pardon, and was again employed under the administration of John Dudley earl of Northumberland. It afterward became the residence of that ambitious man; who, in May 1553, in this palace, caused to be solemnized, with great magnificence, three marriages; his son, lord Guildford Dudley, with the amiable lady Jane Grey: lord Herbert, heir to the earl of Pembroke, with Catherine younger sister of lady Jane: and lord Hastings, heir to the earl of Huntingdon, with his youngest daughter lady Catherine Dudley.* From hence he dragged the reluctant victim, his daughter-in-law, to the Tower, there to be invested with regal dignity.† In eight short months his ambition led the sweet innocent to the nuptial bed, the throne, and the scaffold.

DURHAM-HOUSE was reckoned one of the royal palaces belonging to queen Elizabeth; who gave the use of it to the great Sir Walter Raleigh. In 1640 it was purchased of the see by Philip earl of Pembroke, who pulled it down and built houses on the site.

ON the mention of Raleigh, let me say, that illustrious character had a house at Islington (perhaps) his villa, now known by the name of the Pyed Bull Inn. It is still standing, but makes a poor figure, compared with the modern erections, its pert neighbors, on every side. The apartments are said to be full of ornaments, and coats of arms,* with which I wish some curious peripatetic would favor the public.

ADDELPHI. DURHAM-YARD is now filled with a most magnificent mass of building, called the Adelphi, in honor of two brothers, its architects, purchasers of the houses built by the earl of Pembroke. Before the front to the Thames is a terrace, commanding a charming view towards the river, when it is not obscured by the damps and poisonous fogs which too often infest the air of the lower part of our capital.

THE NEW EXCHANGE.

To the north of Durham-place, fronting the street, stood the New Exchange, which was built under the auspices of our monarch, in 1608, out of the rubbish of the old stables of Durham-house.* The king, queen, and royal family, honored the opening with their presence, and named it Britaines Bursse. It was built somewhat on the model of the Royal Exchange, with cellars beneath, a walk above, and rows of shops over that, filled chiefly with milleners, sempstresses, and the like. This was a fashionable place of resort. In 1654 a fatal affair happened here. Mr. Gerard, a young gentleman, at that time engaged in a plot against Cromwell, was amusing himself in the walk beneath, when he was insulted by Don Pantaleon de Saa, brother to the ambassador of Portugal, who, disliking the return he met with, determined on revenge. He came there the next day with a set of bravos, who, mistaking another gentleman for Mr. Gerard, instantly put him to death, as he was walking with his sister in one hand, and his mistress in the other. Don Pantaleon was with impartial justice tried, and condemned to the axe. Mr. Gerard, who about the same time was detected in the conspiracy, was likewise condemned to die. By a singular chance both the rivals suffered on the same scaffold, within a few hours of each other; Mr. Gerard with intrepid dignity: the Portuguese with all the pusillanimity of an assassin.*

THE WHITE
MILLENER.

ABOVE stairs sat, in the character of a millener, the reduced dutchess of Tyrconnel, wife to Richard Talbot, lord deputy of Ireland under James II.; a bigotted papist, and fit instrument of the designs of the infatuated prince, who had created him earl before his abdication, and after that duke of Tyrconnel. A female, suspected to have been his dutchess, after his death, supported herself for a few days (till she was known, and otherwise provided for) by the little trade of this place: having delicacy enough to wish not to be detected, she sat in a white mask, and a white dress, and was known by the name of the White Widow.†

THIS exchange has long since given way to a row of good houses, with an uniform front, engraved in Mr. Nichols's Progresses of queen Elizabeth, which form a part of the street.

IVY-BRIDGE.

A LITTLE beyond was Ivy-bridge, which crossed the Strand, and had beneath it a way leading to the Thames. This was the boundary between the liberties of the dutchy of Lancaster and those of Westminster. Near this bridge the earls of Rutland had a house, in which several of that noble family breathed their last. The earls of Worcester had a very large house between Dur- ham-place and the Savoy, with gardens to the water-side. The great earl of Clarendon lived in it, before his own was built, and payed for it the extravagant rent of five hundred pounds a year. This was pulled down by their descendant, the duke of Beaufort; and the present Beaufort-buildings rose on its site. This had originally been the town-house of the bishops of Carlisle.^{*} Opposite to these was the garden belonging to the abbot of Westminster, which extended quite to St. Martin's church: it was called the Convent Garden, and retains the name to this day. It was granted, after the Dissolution, by Edward VI. first to the protector Somerset; and afterward to lord Russel, created earl of Bedford. About 1634, Francis earl of Bedford began to clear away the old buildings, and formed the present handsome square. The arcade and the church were the work of Inigo Jones. The cieling, which is now gone, was painted by Edward Pierce, sen. a pupil of Vandyck's. Bedford-house, the former town-house of the noble family, stood in the Strand, but has long since given way to Little Bedford-street.

COVENT-GARDEN.

GREAT part of the palace called the Savoy is now standing, but is little better than a military prison. The palace of the potent Simon de Montford, earl of Leicester, stood on this place.[†]

THE SAVOY.

* Fuller's Ch. Hist. book iii. p. 63.

† Strype's Stow, ii. book iv. 104.

Henry III. granted to Peter of Savoy, uncle to his queen Eleanor, daughter of Berenger of Provence, all the houses upon the Thames where this building now stands, to hold to him and his heirs, yielding yearly at the exchequer three barbed arrows for all services. This prince founded the Savoy, and bestowed it on the fraternity of Montjoy. Queen Eleanor purchased it, and bestowed it on her son Edmund earl of Lancaster. It was rebuilt in a most magnificent manner by his son Henry. It was made the place of confinement of John king of France, in 1356, after he was taken prisoner at the battle of Poitiers. After his release he made a visit to his brother in 1363, and died in this his antient prison the 8th of April following. He was a prince of the strictest honor; for he came over to apologise for the escape of one of his sons, whom he had left a hostage for the performance of certain treaties.

BY WAT
TYLER.

IN 1381 it was entirely destroyed by Wat Tyler, out of spleen to the great owner John of Gaunt. He set fire to it in several places. The rebels issued a proclamation, that no one should convert any part of the rich effects to his own use, under pain of death. They actually flung into the fire one of their companions, who had reserved a piece of rich plate. They afterward found certain barrels, which containing, as they thought, gold and silver, they flung them into the flames. The contents happened to be gunpowder ; which blew up the great hall, and destroyed several houses. Devolving to the crown, Henry VII. began to rebuild it, with the design of forming it into an hospital for a hundred distressed people. He says in his will, he intended by this foundation “ to doo “ and execute vi out of the vii works of pitie and “ mercy, by meanes of keping, susteynyng, and “ mayntenying of commun hospitallis ; wherein if “ thei be duly kept, the said nede pouer people “ bee lodged, viseted in their sicknesses, refressh-“ ed with mete and drinke, and if nede be with “ clothe, and also buried, yf thei fourtune to die “ within the same ; for lack of them, infinite “ nombre of pouer nede people miserably daillie

 “ die, no man putting hande of helpe or remedie.”

This building was in the form of a cross : the walls of which are entire to this time. His son continued and completed the design. The revenues, at the suppression by Edward VI. amounted to above five hundred pounds a year. Queen Mary restored it : and her maids of honor, with exemplary piety, furnished it with all necessaries. It was again suppressed by queen Elizabeth. In 1612, the Prince's wardrobe was at the Savoy. That illustrious nobleman, George Clifford earl of Cumberland, died here in the Dutchy-house in 1605 ; as did William Compton first earl of Northampton, in 1630. At present, part serves as lodgings for private people, for barracks, and a scandalous infectious prison for the soldiery, and for transports.

CHURCH OF
ST. MARY
LE SAVOY.

HERE is besides the church of St. Mary le Savoy. It was originally the chapel to the hospital ; but was made parochial on the impious destruction of St. Mary le Strand by the duke of Somerset. It is engraven in tab xii. vol. ii. of the Vetusta Monumenta. The roof is remarkably fine, flat, and covered with elegant small compartments cut in wood ; and shields, containing emblems of the passion, surround each, with a neat garland.

AMONG the monuments, in the chancel, that in memory of the wife of Sir Robert Douglas merits notice. The lady, who died in 1612, is but a secondary figure, and placed kneeling behind her husband, dressed in a vast distended hood. Before her is her husband, in an easy-attitude, reclined, and resting on his right arm ; the other hand on his sword. He is represented in armour with a robe over it ; on his head a fillet, with a bead round the edge : a motto on his arms, Toujours sans taches.* The sculptor has much merit in this figure.

IN a pretty gothic niche, on the opposite side (occupied probably in old times by the image of our lady) is now the figure of a kneeling female, with a countess's coronet on her head. This commemorates Jocosa, daughter of Sir Alan Apsley, lieutenant of the Tower: first, wife to Lyster Blunt, esq; and afterwards, of William Ramsay, earl of Dalhousie.

ANOTHER fine monument of a recumbent lady, in a great ruff and long gown, with her arms cut on it, attracts our notice; but unfortunately the inscription is lost.

BURLEIGH-HOUSE is said to have been a noble pile, built by that great statesman the lord treasurer Burleigh, who died here in 1598. It was built with brick, and adorned with four square turrets. It was afterwards called Exeter-house, from the title of his son and successor. On its site was erected Exeter-exchange. It was a very handsome pile, with an arcade in front, a gallery above, and shops in both. The plan did not succeed; for the New Exchange had the preference, and stole away both tenants and customers. A part of the old house is still to be seen. All originated in sacrilege. On the site stood a house belonging to the parson of St. Martin's: Sir Thomas Palmer, a creature of the duke of Somerset, obtained it by composition, in the time of Edward VI., and began to build there a magnificent house of brick and timber.*

BURLEIGH, OR EXETER-
HOUSE.

* Stow's Survey, 835.

This afterward came into the hands of lord Burleigh, who finished it in the magnificent manner we have mentioned.

WIMBLE-DON-HOUSE.

A LITTLE farther (where Doyley's warehouse now stands) was Wimbledon-house, built by Sir Edward Cecil, son to the first earl of Exeter, and created by Charles I. viscount Wimbledon. Stow in his annales, p. 1044, says that it was burnt quite down on November 19th, 1628, and that the day before his Lordship had the misfortune of having part of his house at Wimbledon, in Surry, blown up by gunpowder. I remember that when I was a boy, I was brought by my mother into a very great glass-shop, a little beyond Wimbledon-house. The keeper of it was an aged man full of the garrulity often attendant on the advanced period of life. He gave us the following curious anecdote of the lively Nell Gwynne. "When I " was an apprentice," says he, "Mrs. Gwynne
" came into our shop, she had not been there
" long, but a violent noise was heard in the street;
" on enquiry it was found to proceed from a bat" tle between Nell's footman, a country lad, and " one of the mob, in which the lad got a bloody " nose. His mistress asked him what was the " cause of the quarrel. Why, my Lady, they " called your Ladyship a wh—re. Poh! Poh!
" you fool, says Nell, you should never mind

“ that, for many people call me so. That may “ be, says her champion, but they shall never call “ me a wh—re’s man.”

NOT far from hence stood the Strand Bridge, which crossed the street, and received the water which ran from the high grounds, through the present Catherine-street, and delivered it into the Thames.

STRAND
BRIDGE.

ON the south side of the Strand stood a number of buildings, which fell victims to sacrilege, in the reign of Edward VI. St. Mary le Strand, was a very antient church and parish, a rectory, in the gift of the bishops of Worcester, who had near it their inn, or town residence. The bishops of Litchfield and Coventry had another, built by Walter de Langton, elected to that see in 1296. It was also called Chester Inn, as that bishoprick was at the time annexed to the former. The bishops of Landaff had also another house or inn. Finally, the Strand Inn, an inn of Chancery, belonging to the Temple.* I must stop a moment to say, that Occleve, the poet of the reign of Henry V. studied the law here: the place of his education is called Chestres Inn;† but, as that was never appropriated to the study of the law, I little doubt but it is a mistake for this adjacent house. All of these were levelled to the ground by the protector Somerset, to make way for the magnificent palace which bears his name. . The architect is supposed to have been John of Padua, who had a salary in the preceding reign, under the title of devizor of his majesty's buildings,* which was continued to him in the reign of the son. No atonement was made, no compensation to the owners. Part of the church of St. John of Jerusalem, and the tower, were blown up for the sake of the materials. The cloisters on the north side of St. Paul's underwent the same fate, together with the charnel-house and chapel : the tombs were destroyed, and the bones impiously carried away and flung into Finsbury Fields. This was done in 1549, when the building was begun : possibly the founder never enjoyed the use of this palace ; for in 1552 he fell a just victim on the scaffold. The crime of sacrilege is never mentioned among the numerous articles brought against him. This is no wonder, since every great man in those days, protestant and papist, shewed equal rapacity after the goods of the church.

AFTER his death his palace fell to the crown. Queen Elizabeth lived here at certain times, most probably at the expence of her kinsman lord Hunsdon, to whom she had given the use of it. Anne of Denmark kept her court here : which was,

as Wilson says, " a continued Mascarado, where " she and her ladies, like so many sea-nymphs or " 'Nereides, appeared in various dresses to the " ravishment of the beholders!" Catherine queen of Charles II. lived here for some time in the life of her unfaithful spouse; and after his death, till she retired into her native country.

THE architecture of old Somerset-house was that mixture of Grecian and Gothic, introduced into England in the reign preceding its erection. The back-front, and the water-gate, were built from a beautiful design of Inigo Jones, after the year 1623.
 A chapel was begun by him in that year, and afterward finished. It was intended for the use of the Infanta of Spain, the designed spouse of Charles I. when prince of Wales; but, on the failure of that romantic match, it served for the uses of the professors of her religion.

ANTIEN
 BUILDING.

THIS palace was improved and beautified by the queen dowager Henrietta Maria, in 1662, when she flattered herself with the hopes of passing the remainder of her days in England. Two of our most celebrated poets, Cowley and Waller, thought proper to offer their incense on her majesty's attention to Somerset-house. One of Waller's thoughts is tender and elegant :

Constant to England in your love,
 As birds are to their wonted grove :
 Tho' by rude hands their nests are spoil'd,
 There, the next spring, again they build.

MURDER OF SIR EDMOND. GODFREY.

MURDER OF SIR EDMOND-BURY GOD-FREY.

As Charles II. did not find it compatible with his gallantries that his spouse Catherine should be resident at Whitehall, he lodged her, during some part of his reign, in this palace. This made it the haunt of the Catholics; and possibly, during the phrenetic rage of the nation at that period against the professors of her religion, occasioned it to have been made the pretended scene of the murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, in the year 1678. The infamous witnesses against his supposed murderers declared, that he was waylaid, and inveigled into the palace, under pretence of keeping the peace between two servants who were fighting in the yard: that he was there strangled, his neck broken, and his own sword run through his body: that he was kept four days before they ventured to remove him; at length, his corpse was first carried in a sedan-chair to Soho, and then on a horse to Primrose-hill, between Kilburn and Hampstead. There it certainly was found, transfixed with the sword, and his money in his pocket, and his rings on his fingers. The murder therefore was not by robbers, but the effect of private revenge; yet it is not probable that it was committed within these walls; for the assassins would never have hazarded a discovery by carrying the corpse three miles, when they could have so safely disposed of it in the Thames. The abandoned character of the witnesses, Prance and Bedloe (the former of whom had been treated with most horrid cruelties, to compel him to confess what he declared he never was guilty of) together with the absurd and irreconcilable testimony which they gave on the trial, has made unprejudiced times to doubt the whole. That he was murdered is indisputable: he had been an active magistrate, and had made many enemies. The marks of strangling round his throat, and his broken neck, evince the impossibility of his having put an end to his own existence, as some have insinuated. But the innocence of the three poor convicts would not avail, the torrent of prejudice prevailed against them; and they were executed, denying the crime in the moment of death. One was a Protestant: the two others Roman Catholics, and belonging to the chapel; so probably were fixed upon, by the instigators of the accusation, in order to involve the queen in the uncharitable suspicion. I wish I could exculpate the zealots of that reign, from giving ample cause (in this and other instances) to the Catholics to recriminate on them the unjust executions of the period of Henry and Mary.

THIS tragedy became at the time the subject of many medals.* On one is the bust of Sir Edmondbury, and two hands strangling him: on the reverse, the pope giving his benediction to a man strangling another on the ground. On a second, with the same bust, is the representation of the carrying the magistrate on horseback to Primrose-hill. A third, makes him walking with his broken neck, and sword buried in his body: and on the reverse, St. Denys with his head in his hand, with this inscription:

* See Evelyn's Medals, 171, 172, 173.

GODFREY walks up hill after he was dead,
DENIS walks down hill carrying his head.

THE present magnificent building is after a design by Sir William Chambers: when completed, it is to be the station of numbers of our public offices. The Navy Office, and indeed almost every other, excepting the Treasury, the Secretary of State's, the Admiralty, and the War Office.

The Royal Society, and the Society of Antiquaries, hold their meetings here; and here also are annually exhibited the works of the British painters and sculptors. The terrace on the south side is a walk bounded by the Thames, and unparalleled for grandeur and beauty of view.

BATH'S INN. To the east of Somerset-house, stood Bath's Inn, inhabited by the bishops of Bath and Wells, in their visits to the capital. It was wrested from them, in the reign of Edward VI. by lord Thomas Seymour, high admiral, and received the name of Seymour-place. This was one of the scenes of his indecent dalliance with the princess Elizabeth, afterward queen. At first he certainly was not ill received, notwithstanding he had just espoused the unhappy Catherine Parre. Ambition, not lust, actuated this wretched man; his designs on Elizabeth, and consequently on the crown, spurred him on. The instrument of his design was Thomas Parrye, cofferer to the princess, to whom he offered, for her grace's accommodation, his house and all the furniture, during her stay in London.* The queen's death, and her own suspicions on her death-bed, give just cause for the foulest surmises.† His execution, which soon followed, put an end to his projects, and saved Elizabeth, and the nation, from a tyrant, possibly worse than him from whom they had, but a few years before, been released.

THIS house in after-times passed to Thomas Howard earl of Arundel, and was called Arundel palace. The Duc de Sully, who was lodged in it during his embassy to England, on the accession of James I. says, it was one of the finest and most commodious of any in London, from its great number of apartments on the same floor: but the prints lately given of it by Mr. Thane, prove that the buildings, notwithstanding they covered a great extent of ground, were both low and mean: the views from the extensive gardens, up and down the river, were remarkably fine. Here was kept the magnificent collection of statues formed by the earl. Howsoever faulty the noble historian may have represented him in some respects, his judgment in the fine arts will remain indisputable. It was pulled down in the last century ; but the family name, and the titles, are retained in the streets which rose on its site, viz. those of Howard, Norfolk, Arundel, and Surry. There was a design to build a mansion-house for the family, out of the accumulated rents, on that part of the gardens next to the river: an act of parlement was obtained for the purpose,* but the plan never was executed.

AFTER it came into the possession of the duke of Norfolk (the same who presented his library to the Royal Society), he permitted that learned body to hold their meetings in Arundel-house ; but on its being taken down, the meetings were removed to Gresham college.†

OPPOSITE to Chester Inn, stood an antient cross. According to the simplicity of the age, in the year 1294, and at other times, the judges sat without the city, on this cross, to administer justice ; and sometimes they made use of the bishop's house for that purpose. We learn, from Rastall's what east of the site of the cross was the rural appearance of a May-pole.* In 1717, it fell to decay, and what remained was begged by Sir Isaac Newton, who caused it to be carried to Wanstead in Essex, where it was erected in the park, and had the honor of raising the greatest telescope then known. On its site rose the first of the fifty new churches, which is known by the name of the New Church in the Strand. The first stone was laid in 1714. The architect was Gibbs; who loaded it with ornaments to such a degree as did very little credit to his own taste, or that of his employers.

NEW-

IN THE
STRAND.

IN Drury-lane, which points towards the church, stood Drury-house, the habitation of the great family of the Druries, and, I believe, built by Sir William Drury, a most able commander in the Irish wars; who unfortunately fell in a duel with Sir John Boroughs, in a foolish quarrel about precedence.† Sir Robert, his son, was a great patron of Doctor Donne, and assigned to him apartments in this house.* I cannot learn into whose hands it passed afterward. During the time of the fatal discontents of the favorite Essex, it was the place where his imprudent advisers resolved on such counsels, as terminated in the destruction of him and his adherents.

CRAVEN-
HOUSE.

We afterwards find the heroic William lord Craven, in 1673 created earl Craven, possessed of this house : he rebuilt it in its present form, a large brick pile now concealed by other buildings. Part is at present a public-house. In searching after Craven-house, I instantly knew it by the sign, that of the queen of Bohemia's head, his admired mistress, whose battles he first fought, animated by love and duty. When he could aspire to her hand, it is supposed he succeeded : for it is said they were privately married ; and that he built for her the fine seat at Hampstead Marshal, in the county of Berks, which was destroyed by fire. I have before given an account of this illustrious nobleman.† I may repeat the service which he rendered to this his native city in particular. He was so indefatigable in preventing the ravages of the frequent fires of those days, that it was said, that his very horse smelt it out. He, and the duke of Albemarle (the noted Monk) heroically stayed in town during the dreadful pestilence; and, at the hazard of their lives, preserved order in the midst of the terrors of the time.

IN the court in Craven-buildings is a very good portrait of this hero, in armour, with a truncheon in his hand, and mounted on his white horse: on each side is an earl's and a baron's coronet, and the letters W. C. It is painted al fresco, and is in good preservation.*

THE theatre royal, in this street, originated on the Restoration. The king made a grant of a patent for acting in what was then called the Cock-pit, and the Phœnix. The actors were the king's servants, were on the establishment, and ten of them were called Gentlemen of the Great Chamber, and had ten yards of scarlet cloth allowed them, with a suitable quantity of lace.†

IT is singular that this lane, of later times so notorious for intrigue, should receive its title from a family-name, which, in the language of Chaucer, had an amorous signification:

Of bataille and of chevalrie,
Of ladies love and Druerie,
Anon I wol you tell.

CHURCH OF
ST. CLEMENT DANES.

BETWEEN Clements-inn and the Strand, is the church of St. Clement Danes, called so either from being the place of interment of Harold the Hare-foot, or of the massacre of certain Danes who had taken refuge there: it was one of the churches built on this tract before the Conquest. At the time of the insurrection of the unhappy earl of Essex, a piece of artillery was placed on the top of the tower, which commanded Essex-house. The present church was rebuilt in 1640.† Here, beneath a tomb, with his figure expressed in brass, was buried John Arundel, bishop of Exeter, who died in 1503, at Exeter-house, the town residence of the bishops of Exeter. It was founded by Walter Stapleton, bishop of that see, and lord treasurer of England, unfortunately a favorite with Edward II. in those factious days. He was seized by the mob, hurried to Cheapside, where they beheaded him, and carried his corpse before his own palace, and there buried it beneath a heap of sand. The house is said to have been very magnificent. Lacy, bishop of Exeter in the reign of Henry VI. added a great hall. The first lord Paget, a good catholic, made no scruple of laying violent hands on it, in the grand period of plunder. He improved it greatly, and called it after his own name. At this house it was alleged that the great duke of Somerset designed the assassination of several of the council. This involved the noble owner in his ruin. In the reign of queen Elizabeth, it was possessed by the great earl of Leicester, and changed its name to Leicester-house. The earl left it by will * to his son-in-law Robert, earl of Essex, the unfortunate imprudent favorite of Elizabeth, and it was called after his name. This was the scene of his frantic actions; from hence he sallied on the vain hope of exciting the city to arm in his behalf against its sovereign; to this place he forced his way back, and after a short siege submitted, and soon afterwards received his due punishment, reluctantly inflicted by his mistress, hesitating between fear and unseasonable love. The memory of these transactions is still retained in the name of Essex-street, and Essex- stairs, and Devereux-court. In the last, on the outside of a house, is placed a bust of the parliament general, son of the unfortunate favorite.

BAT
PIDGEON.

SINCE the GUARDIAN did not think it beneath him to celebrate some of the capital artificers of his time, A. D. 1713, in his first, forty-third, and sixty-fourth numbers, I may venture to mention the great Bat Pidgeon, who in his advanced age cut my boyish locks in the year 1740. He lived in the corner house of St. Clements Church-yard, next to the Strand, and was most eminent in his day, among the very few who at that time practised the art. In 1794 an army might be raised among the professors! In the times I mention, Bat might have been the only one to whom the family of the Lizards (N° 43.) and other persons of rank would entrust their heads. Our sex, even the youngest, in general wore wigs, much to the disadvantage of the soft features of the early age: and the ladies confided the important charge of their lovely tresses, then uncontaminated by grease and powders, to their cleanly maids, or the fashionable tiring-woman, a profession long ago lost in our metropolis.

TEMPLE-BAR.

The Strand was divided, in 1670, from Fleet-street, by the gate called Temple-bar; before the great fire, by nothing but posts, rails, and chains. On the east side, in the niches, are the statues of James and Anne of Denmark, not without some animation, and on the opposite, those of Charles I. and Charles II.; all by John Bushnel, who died in 1701. On this gate has been the sad exhibition of the heads of such unhappy men who have attempted the subversion of the government of their country. The last (and may they be the last!) were of those who fell victims, in 1746, to principles fortunately extinct with the family from which they originated. This gate is the western limit of Farringdon Ward Without, or the western extremity of the city of London.

ON the right hand are the entrances into the THE TEMPLE. Temple, one of our celebrated seats of law, which took its name from that gallant religious military order the knights templars. They were originally crusaders, who happening to be quartered in places adjacent to the holy temple in Jerusalem, in 1118, consecrated themselves to the service of religion, by deeds of arms.* Hugo de Paganis, Geoffry of St. Omers, and seven others, began the order, by binding themselves, after the manner of the regular canons of St. Augustines, to chastity and obedience, and professing to protect the pilgrims to the Holy Land from all wrong and robbery on the road. At first they subsisted on alms, and had only one horse between two of them; a rule was appointed for them, and they wore a white habit, afterward distinguished by a red cross on their left shoulder. By their devotion, and the fame of their gallant actions, they became very popular in all parts of Europe; and were so enriched by the favor of princes, and other great men, that, at the time of their dissolution, the order was found possessed of sixteen thousand manors. They became at last so infected with pride and luxury, as to excite general hatred; and a persecution, founded on most unjust and fictitious accusations, was formed against them in France, under Philip le Bel. Their riches seem to have been their chief crime: numbers of innocent and heroic knights suffered in the flames, with the piety and constancy of martyrs; some of them, at the stake, summoned their chief enemies, Clement V. and Philip, to appear in a certain time at the divine tribunal; both of those princes died about the time prescribed, which, in an age of superstition, proved the validity of the summons. This potent order came into England in the reign of king Stephen, and had their first house in Holborn, which was called the Old Temple. They founded the New Temple in 1185, where they continued till the suppression of the order in 1310, when they were condemned to perpetual penance, and dispersed into several monasteries. Edward II. granted this house, and all their other possessions in London, to Thomas earl of Lancaster, and, after his rebellion and forfeiture, to Aymer de Valence, earl of Pembroke; on his death, they reverted to the crown, and were given to the knights hospitallers of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, a few years after they had so valiantly driven the Turks out of the isle of Rhodes. These knights again granted the Temple to the students of the common law, in the reign of Edward III. to whose use it has been ever since applied.

FALL OF THE KNIGHTS

THE church was founded by the templars in the reign of Henry II. upon the model of that of the holy sepulchre, and was consecrated in 1185, by Heraclius, patriarch of Jerusalem. The entrance is through a door with a Norman arch. Within, the form is circular, supported by six round arches, each resting on four round pillars, bound together by a fascia. Above each arch is a window with a rounded top, with a gallery, and rich Saxon arches intersecting each other. On the outside of the pillars is a considerable space, preserving the circular form. On the lower part of the wall are small pilasters meeting in pointed arches at top, and over each pillar a grotesque head. Joined to this building, is a large choir of a square form, with narrow gothic windows, evidently built at a different time. On the outside is a buttress between every window.

ITS ROUND
CHURCH.

ON the floor of the round church are two groups MONUMENTS. of knights. In the first are four, each of them cross-legged, three of them in complete mail, in plain helmets flattened at top, and with very long shields. One is known to have been Geoffry de Magnaville, created earl of Essex in 1148. His end was singular; for, driven to despair by the injustice of his monarch king Stephen, he gave loose to every act of violence. He was mortally wounded at an attack of Burwel castle, in Cambridgeshire; and, being found by some templars, was dressed by them in the habit of the order and carried from the spot: as he died excommunicated, they wrapped his body in lead, and hung it on a crooked tree in the Temple orchard. On being absolved by the pope (it being proved that he expressed great penitence in his last moments) he was taken down, and buried first in the cemetery, and afterward in the place where we find this memorial of him.*

ONE of these figures is singular, being bare-headed, and bald, his legs armed, his hands mailed, his mantle long, round his neck a cowl, as if, according to a common superstition in early days, he had desired to be buried in the dress of a monk, lest the evil spirit should take possession of his body. On his shield are three fleurs de lis.

IN this group is a stone coffin of a ridged shape, conjectured to have been the tomb of William Plantagenet, fifth son of Henry III.

* Mr. Gough's Monum. i. 24. tab. v.

IN the second group are other figures, but none of them cross-legged, except the outermost: all are armed in mail. The helmets much resemble the former, but two are mailed. One figure is in a spirited attitude, drawing a broad dagger; one leg rests on the tail of a cockatrice, the other in the action of being drawn up, with the head of the monster beneath. None of the eight figures, except that of Geoffry de Magnaville, are ascertained; but Camden conjectures that three are intended to commemorate William earl of Pembroke, who died in 1219, and his sons William and Gilbert, likewise earls of Pembroke, and Marshals of England.* In the first group, one of the figures bears a lion on his shield, the arms of that great family. Gilbert was brought up to the church, and, notwithstanding he was totally unskilled in exercises of chivalry, would enter into the gallant lists; but mounting a fiery courser, was run away with, flung, and killed, at a tournament at Ware, in 1242.

THE being represented cross-legged is not always a proof of the deceased having had the merit either of having been a crusader, or having made a pilgrimage to the holy sepulchre. I have seen, at Mitton in Yorkshire, two figures of the Sherbornes, thus represented: one died in 1629, the other in 1689: who, I verily believe, could never have had any more than a wish to enter the holy land.

To these antient monuments may be added that of a bishop, in his episcopal dress, a mitre, and a crosier, well executed in stone.

OF illustrious persons of later date, is the famous Plowden, a Shropshire man, treasurer of this society in 1572, and a lawyer of most distinguished abilities. Camden says of him, that in integrity he was second to none of his profession. His figure is represented recumbent, and in his gown.

HERE is interred the celebrated Selden, who died in 1654. He was the best skilled in the constitution, and the various branches of antiquity, of any man. Yet, towards the close of his life, he was so thoroughly convinced of the vanity of all human knowledge, as to say, that the 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th verses of the second chapter of the epistle to Titus, afforded him more solid consolation than all that he had ever read.

SIR John Vaughan, born at Trawscoed, in Cardiganshire, lies near his friend Mr. Selden: the principles of both were anti-monarchical. After the Restoration, the former declined preferment offered by the chancellor Clarendon, but afterward accepted the office of chief justice of the common-pleas, from the enemies of that illustrious character. He died in 1674.

THE magnificent hall of the Middle Temple was rebuilt in the three years treasurership of Plowden: after he quitted the office, he continued to have the direction of the building, which was not completed in less than seven years. The roof is venerably constructed with timber. Along the sides of the hall are the coats of arms of the Readers, from Richard Swayne, dated 1597, to William Graves, esq; in 1790. The office is still preserved, and the reader annually elected; but the lectures or readings have been long disused. The length of the hall (including the passage) is a hundred feet: that of the cross post at the top sixty-four. This noble room escaped the great fire, which destroyed most of the Temple which lay to the east.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.

THE hall of the Inner Temple is ornamented with emblematical paintings by Sir James Thornhill: and by two full-length portraits of those pillars of the law, Lyttleton, who died in 1481; and his commentator, the able but insolent Coke, who departed in 1634.

INNER TEMPLE.

THE account of the great feast given in the hall of the Inner Temple, by the serjeants, in 1555, is extremely worth consulting;* and also of the hospitable Christmassings of old times. Dudley earl of Leicester once enjoyed them, and, with the romance of his mistress, styled himself Palaphilos, the society by the will of — Aspley, esq; a bencher: and contains about nine thousand volumes. The catalogue was published in quarto, 1734, and was continued from that date to 1766. He also left a set of chambers to the librarian, which he may either let or occupy!

THE TEMPLE
GARDEN.

THE garden has of late been most judiciously enlarged, by a considerable embankment extending into the river; and part of the filthy muddy shore is converted into a most beautiful walk. The view up and down the water is most extremely rich. Blackfriars-bridge, part of Westminster-bridge, the Adelphi, and the elegant back-front of Somerset-house, rival the world in variety and magnificence of objects. If elegance alone were to be consulted, it is heartily to be wished that these embankments may make a farther progress; the want of which, alone, gives to the Seine, at Paris, a boasted superiority. Without the prejudices of an Englishman, I will venture to dare a comparison of the bridges; the most partial foreigner will never hazard a comparison of the rivers.

SHAKESPEARE (whether from tradition, or history, I know not) makes the Temple Garden the place in which the badge of the white and red rose originated, the distinctive badge of the houses of York and Lancaster, under which the respective partizans of each arranged themselves, in the fatal quarrel which caused such torrents of blood to flow.

NEAR Temple-bar stood, till very lately, the Devil Tavern, so called from its sign of St. Dunstan seizing the evil spirit by the nose with a pair of hot tongs. Ben Johnson has immortalised it by his Leges Conviviales, which he wrote for the regulation of a club of wits, held here in a room he dedicated to Apollo; over the chimney-piece of which they were preserved. The tavern was in his days kept by Simon Wadloe; whom, in a copy of verses over the door of the Apollo, he dignified with the title of King of Skinkers. It was purchased by Child's banking-house; and other buildings have been erected on the site.

THE DEVIL TAVERN.

OPPOSITE to this noted house is Chancery-lane, the most antient of any to the west. It was built in the time of Henry III. and then called New-lane; which was afterwards changed into its present name, on account of its vicinity to the courts.

CHANCERY-
LANE.

SERJEANTS-INN is the first which opens into the lane: it takes its name from having been in old times the residence or lodgings of the serjeants at law, as early at least as the time of Henry VI. It was at that time, and possibly may be yet, held under a lease from the dean and chapter of York. In 1442 William Antrobus, citizen and taylor of London, held it at the rent of x marks a year, under the law Latin description of *Unum messuagium cum gardino in parochia S. Dunstani, in Fleet-street, in suburbio civitatis LONDINI, quod nuper fuit Johannis Rote, & in quo Joh. Ellerkar, et alii servientes ad legem nuper inhabitaverunt.

CLIFFORDS-
INN.

CLIFFORDS-INN is the next, so named from its having been the town residence of Robert de Clifford, ancestor to the earls of Cumberland. It was granted to him by Edward II.; and his widow assigned it to the students of the law, in the next reign, for the yearly rent of ten pounds.†

THE ROLLS.

FARTHER up is the Rolls. The house was founded by Henry III. for converted Jews, who there lived under a learned Christian, appointed to instruct and govern them. In 1279, Edward I. caused about two hundred and eighty Jews, of both sexes, to be hanged for clipping. He bestowed one half of their effects on the first preachers, who undertook the trouble of converting the unbelieving race; and the other half for the support of the converts : the house was called Domus

Conservatorum. I question whether the Master of the Rolls does not to this day receive an annual stipend at the exchequer as for Jewish converts. In 1377, it was first applied to its present use; and the master was called Custos Rotulorum: the first was William Bursall, clerk. The masters were selected out of the church, and often king's chaplains, till the year 1634, when Thomas Cromwell, afterwards earl of Essex, was appointed. It was an office of high rank, and is next in precedence to that of chief justice of the king's bench. The master has his chaplain, and his preacher.

The chapel is adjacent to the house, and was built by Inigo Jones; begun in 1617, and finished at the expence of two thousand pounds. It was consecrated by George Mounteigne, bishop of London, and the sermon preached by the famous Doctor Donne. Among the monuments is one of the masters, Sir Edward Bruce, created by James I. after his accession, baron of Kinloss. He is represented lying reclined, with his head resting on one hand. His hair is short; his beard long, and divided towards the end; his dress a long furred robe. Before him is kneeling a man in armour, possibly his son lord Kinloss, who perished in the desperate duel between him and Sir Edward Sackville, in 1613; and ancestor to the earls of Elgin and Aylesbury. The sad relation is given by Sir Edward himself. He seems solely actuated by honor. His rival by the deepest revenge.*

He was one of the ambassadors sent by James to congratulate queen Elizabeth on the defeat of Essex's insurrection. He then commenced a secret correspondence with the subtle Cecil; and, when James came to the throne, was, besides the peerage, rewarded with the place of master of the rolls for life. He died January 14th, 1610.

THE monument of John Yonge, D. L. L. is the work of Torregiano.† His figure is recumbent on a sarcophagus, in a long red gown, and deep square cap: his face finely executed, possibly from a cast after his death; his chin beardless. Above him are the head of our SAVIOUR, and two cherubims: resistless superstitions of the artist. This gentleman was appointed master of the rolls in 1510, and died in 1517.

THERE is another handsome monument, of Sir Richard Allington, knight (son of Sir Giles Allington, of Horseheath, in Cambridgeshire, knight, ancestor, by his first wife, of the lords Allington), who lies here, by the accident of his marriage with Jane daughter of John Cordall, esq; of Long-Melford, in Suffolk, and sister and coheir of Sir

* See the Guardian, Nos. 129, 133—and Collins's Peerage, ii. 195 to 197.

† Mr. Walpole.

William Cordall, of the same place, knight, and master of the rolls. Sir Richard, I presume, died here: the date of his death is 1561. His figure is represented kneeling, in armour, with a short beard and hair. His wife is opposite; and beneath, on a tablet, are three female figures, also kneeling: these represent his daughters. After his death his widow lived in Holborn, at a house she built, which long went by the name of Allington place. She appears, by some of the parochial records of the capital, to have been a lady of great charity.

My countryman Sir John Trevor, who died master of the rolls, in 1717, lies here. Wisely his epitaph is thus confined, "Sir J. T. M. R. 1717." I will not repeat the evil, which regard to veracity obliged me to say of him in another place.* Some other masters rest within these walls. Sir John Strange (as I once imagined) does not lie among them. His worthy son informed me that he was interred in 1754, in a vault in the church-yard of Lowlayton, in Essex, and I believe without the quibbling but indisputable line:

Here lies an honest Lawyer, that is Strange!

a garden, once belonging to John Herberton, and was granted to them by Henry III. who excepted it out of the charter of the Damus Convensorum.^{*} At present the site is covered with houses, known by the name of Chichester Rents.

LINCOLN'S-INN.

THE gate to Lincoln's-Inn is of brick, but no small ornament to the street. It was built by Sir Thomas Lovel, once a member of this inn, and afterward treasurer of the household to Henry VIII. The other parts were rebuilt at different times, but much about the same period. None of the original building is left, for it was formed out of the house of the Black Friars, which fronted Holborn; and out of the palace of Ralph Nevill, chancellor of England, and bishop of Chichester, built by him in the reign of Henry III. on a piece of ground granted to him by the king. It continued to be inhabited by some of his successors in the see. This was the original site of the Dominicans, or Black Friars, before they removed to the spot now known by that name. On part of the ground, now covered with buildings, Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, built an Inne, as it was in those days called, for himself, in which he died in 1312. The ground belonged to the Black Friars, and was granted by Edward I. to that great earl. The whole has retained his name. One of the bishops of Chichester, in after times, granted leases of the buildings to certain students of the law, deserving a rent, and lodgings for themselves whenever they came to town. This seems to have taken place about the time of Henry VII.

THE chapel was designed by Inigo Jones; it is built upon massy pillars, and affords, under its shelter, an excellent walk. This work evinces that Inigo never was designed for a gothic architect. The lord-chancellor holds his sittings in the great hall. This, like that of the Temple, had its revels, and great Christmasses. Instead of the Lord of Mismat, it had formerly its King of the Cocknies. It had also a Jack Straw; but in the time of queen Elizabeth he, and all his adherents, were utterly banished. I must not omit, that in the same reign sumptuary laws were made to regulate the dress of the members of the house; who were forbidden to wear long hair, or great ruffs, cloaks, boots, or spurs. In the reign of Henry VIII. beards were prohibited at the great table, under pain of paying double commons. His daughter Elizabeth, in the first year of her reign, confined them to a fortnight's growth, under penalty of 3s. 4d.; but the fashion prevailed so strongly, that the prohibition was repealed, and no manner of size limited to that venerable excrescence!

a regular plan. The disposition of these grounds was; in 1618, by a commission from the king, intrusted to the care of the lord chancellor Bacon, the earls of Worcester, Pembroke, Arundel, and numbers of other noblemen, and principal gentry. In the commission it is alleged, " That more " public works, near and about the city of London,
 " had been undertaken in the sixteen years
 " of that reign; than in ages heretofore : and that " the grounds called Lincolnes-Inn-Fields were " much planted round with dwellings and lodg" ings of noblemen and gentlemen of qualitie :
 " but at the same time it was deformed by cot" tages and mean buildings, incroachments on " the fields, and nuses to the neighborhood.
 " The commissioners were therefore directed to " reform those grievances ; and, according to their " discretion, to frame and reduce those fields" (called in the statute of the 8th of Geo. II.
ch. 26. Cup-Field and Purs-Field) " both for " sweetness, uniformitie, and comelines, into such " walkes, partitions, or other plottes, and in such " sorte, manner, and forme, both for publique " health and pleasure, as by the said Inigo Jones
 " (recited in the commission) is or shall be ac" cordingly drawn, by way of map."* Thus authorized, Inigo drew the ground-plot, and gave it the exact dimensions of the base of one of the pyramids of Egypt. On the west side is Lindsey-house, once the seat of the earls of Lindsey, and of their descendants the dukes of Ancaster; built after a beautiful design of that great architect. The view of this side of the square, and of Lincoln's-Inn-gardens, is very pleasing, particularly when the latter are illuminated by the western sun. Here also was, in the time of king William, a play-house erected within the walls of the tennis-court, under the royal patronage. In this theatre Betterton, and his troop of actors, excited the admiration of the public, if we may credit Gibber, as much as Roscus did that of the people of Rome, or Garrick of those of England in recent days.

ON another stage, of a different nature, was performed the sad tragedy of the death of the virtuous lord Russel, who lost his head in the middle of the square, on July 21st, 1683. Party writers assert that he was brought here, in preference to any other spot, in order to mortify the citizens with the sight. In fact, it was the nearest open space to Newgate, the place of his lordship's confinement: otherwise dragging him to Tower-hill, the usual concluding scene on these dreadful occasions, would have given his enemies full opportunity of indulging the imputed malice.

EXECUTION
RUSSEL.

NEWCASTLE-
HOUSE.

IN the same square, at the corner of Queen-street, stands a house formerly inhabited by the well known minister, the late duke of Newcastle. It was built about the year 1686, by the marquis of Powis, and called Powis-house, and afterward sold to the late noble owner. The architect was captain William Winde. It is said, that government had it once in contemplation to have bought and settled it officially on the great seal. At that time it was inhabited by the lord keeper, Sir Nathan Wright.

QUEEN-
STREET.

IN the last century Queen-street was the residence of many people of rank. Among others was Comoay-house, the residence of the noble family of that name; Paulet-house, belonging to the marquis of Winchester; and the house in which lord Herbert, of Cherbury, finished his romantic life. The fronts of certain houses, possibly of those, or others of the nobility, are distinguished by brick pilasters, and rich capitals.

CLARE-
MARKET.

ON the back part of Portugal Row, is Clare-market; close to which, the second John earl of Clare, had a palace of his own building, in which he lived about the year 1657, in a most princely manner.*

I SHALL pursue, from Queen-street, my journey westward, and point out the most remarkable places which rose into being between the years 1562 and 1600, and incidentally some others of later date. I have before mentioned the streets which rose in that period. Let me add, that Long-acre was built on a piece of ground, once Long-Acre, belonging to Westminster-abbey, called the seven acres, which, in 1552, was granted to John earl of Bedford.

* Howell's Hist. London, 345.

ST. GILES'S church, and a few houses to the west of it, in the year 1600, were but barely separated from Broad-street. The church is supposed to have belonged to an hospital for lepers, founded about the year 1117, by Matilda, queen to Henry I. Over the entrance to the church-yard is a curious piece of sculpture, representing the last day, containing an amazing number of figures, set up about the year 1686.

ST. GILES'S
IN THE FIELDS.

In antient times it was customary to present to malefactors, on their way to the gallows (which, about the year 1413, was removed from Smithfield, and placed between St. Giles's High-street, and Hug-lane) a great bowl of ale, as the last refreshment they were to receive in this life.* Such a custom prevailed at York, which gave rise to the saying, that the sadler of Bawtry was hanged for leaving his liquor. Had he stopt, as usual, his reprieve, which was actually on the road, would have arrived time enough to have saved him.

* Newcourt, i. 611.

HERE was executed, in the most barbarous manner, the famous Sir John Oldcastle, baron Cobham. His crime was that of adopting the tenets of Wycliffe. He was misrepresented to our heroic prince Henry V. by the bigoted clergy, as a heretic and traitor; and to have been actually at the head of thirty thousand Lollards, in these very fields. About a hundred inoffensive people were found there: Cobham escaped; but was taken some time after in Wales. He suffered death on this spot: was hung on a gallows, by a chain fastened round his body, and, thus suspended, burnt alive. He died; not with the calm constancy of a martyr, but with the wildest effusions of enthusiastic ravings.

CHURCH. THIS church was rebuilt in 1625. Owing to the ground around it being raised by filth and other adventitious matter; the floor was eight feet below the level which it had acquired in the year 1730. This alone made it necessary to rebuild the church in the present century. The first stone was laid in 1730; it was finished in 1734, at the expence of ten thousand pounds, in a manner which does great credit to its architect, Mr. Henry Flitcraft.

IN this church was interred the famous lord Herbert, of Cherbury, who died in 1648. Lord Orford says, that he had erected an allegoric monument to himself in the church in Mont- gomery.* I must have overlooked it, or it never was put up. There is in that church a fine one to his father Richard Herbert, who died in 1597.

IN the church-yard I have observed with horror a great square pit, with many rows of coffins piled one upon the other, all exposed to sight and smell. Some of the piles were incomplete, expecting the mortality of the night. I turned away disgusted at the view, and scandalized at the want of police, which so little regards the health of the living as to permit so many putrid corpses, tacked between some slight boards, to disperse their dangerous effluvia over the capital. Notwithstanding a compliment paid to me in one of the public papers, for having occasioned the abolition of the horrible practice, it still remains uncorrected in this great parish. The reform ought to have begun in the place first stigmatized!

NEAR this church was the house of Alise dutchess Dudley, who died here in 1669, aged ninety. She was the widow of the great Sir Robert Dudley, son to Robert earl of Leicester, who, by various untoward circumstances, was denied legitimacy, and his paternal estates. He was created a duke of the empire, had assumed the title of duke of Northumberland, and lived and died in great estimation in Tuscany. This lady was advanced to the title of dutchess by Charles I. but without any entail. She merited the honor by the greatness of her mind and extent of her charities. Her body was interred at Stonely, in Warwickshire, the place of her family, she being the third daughter of Sir Thomas Leigh, of Stonely, ancestor of the late lord Leigh. A fine monument was erected to her honor at Stonely,* and there is a grateful memorial of her in this church.

THE mention of St. Giles's bowl, naturally leads to that of the late place of the conclusion of human laws. It was called in the time of Edward III. when the gentle Mortimer finished his days there, The Elms; but the original name, as is the present, was Tybourne; not from tye and burn, as if it was called so from the manner of capital punishments, but from Bourne, the Saxon word for a brook, and Tye its proper name; which gave name to a manor before the Conquest, when it was held by the abbess of Berchinges, or Berking, in Essex. Here was also a village and church denominated St. John the Evangelist, which fell to decay, and was succeeded by that of Mary bourne, corrupted into Mary-la-bonne. About the year 1238, this brook furnished nine conduits for supplying the city with water: but the introduction of the New River superseded the use of them. Here the lord mayor had a banquetting-house, to which his lordship and brethren were wont to repair on horseback, attended by their ladies in waggons: and, after viewing the conduits, they returned to the city, where they were magnificently entertained by the lord mayor.*

In 1626, queen Henrietta Maria was compelled by her priests to take a walk, by way of penance, to Tyburn. What her offence was we are not told; but Charles was so disgusted at this insolence, that he soon after sent them, and all her majesty's French servants, out of the kingdom.†

I SHALL return through the mile and a quarter of country, at this time formed into Oxford-street, as handsome a one as any in Europe, and, I believe, the longest. After passing through Broad-street, and getting into Holborn, is Bloomsbury, the antient manor of Lomesbury, in which our kings in early times had their stables: all the space is at present covered with handsome streets, and a fine square. This was first called Southampton-square; and the great house‡ which forms one side, built after a design of Inigo Jones, Southampton (now Bedford) house. From hence the amiable relict of William lord Russel dates her letters; this being her residence till her death in 1723. The late duke fitted up the gallery, and bought the cartoons, copied by Sir James Thornhill, at the sale of that eminent artist.

MONTAGUE-
HOUSE.

MONTAGUE-HOUSE (now the British Museum) was built on a French plan, by the first duke of Montague, who had been ambassador in France. The staircase and ceilings were painted by Rousseau and La Fosse: the apotheosis of Iris, and the assembly of the gods, are by the latter. His grace's second wife was the mad dutchess of Albemarle, widow to Christopher, second duke of that title. She married her second husband as emper-ror of China, which gave occasion to a scene in Cibber's play of the Sick Lady cured. She was kept in the ground apartment during his grace's life, and was served on the knee to the day of her death, which happened in 1734, at Newcastle-house, Clerkenwell,* at the age of 96. The second duke and dutchess lived only in one of the wings, till their house at Whitehall was completed.

POWIS-
HOUSE.

I MUST mention, that to the east of Bloomsbury-square, in Great Ormond-street, stood in my memory Powis-house, originally built by the marquis of Powis, in the last century. When it was occupied by the Duc d'Aumont, ambassador from Louis XIV. in 1712, it was burnt down, and rebuilt at the expence of that magnificent monarch. The front was ornamented with fluted pilasters. On the top was a great reservoir, as a guard against fire, and it also served as a fish-pond. This house has been pulled down, and the ground granted on building leases.

I SHALL just mention Red-lion-square, not far to the south of this house, merely for the sake of some lines written on the occasion of the erection of the clumsy obelisk lately vanished :

BEDFORD-ROW, in this neighborhood, took its name from the uses to which those lands, and others adjacent, were bequeathed by Sir William Harpur, son of William Harpur, of Bedford; viz. to found a free and perpetual school, in that his native place; for portioning poor maidens; for supporting poor children; and for maintaining the poor with the surplus; all of them inhabitants of the said town. Part of the lands were of his own inheritance; part belonging to the Chartreux, at that time lately dissolved. Some of the lands were lost, others granted to Sir Thomas Fisher, baronet, for other lands belonging to him; the remainder granted, in the year 1668, upon lease, by the corporation of Bedford, trustees to the charity, for the purposes of building, for the term of forty-one years, at the yearly rent of ninety-nine pounds : and in 1684, the reversion to Nicholas Barbon, D. D. for the further term of fifty-one years, at the rent of a hundred and fifty pounds, on the expiration of the first lease. Bedford-street, Bedford-row and court, Princes-street, Theobald's-row, North-street, East-street, Lamb's-conduit-street, Queen-street, Eagle-street, Boswel-court, and several other streets, rose in consequence, by which the rents were most considerably increased. A suit arose, about the year 1725, between the warden and fellows of New College, and the corporation of Bedford, concerning the right of appointing the masters to the school, and their salaries. The same was decided, in 1725, in favor of the college ; the corporation was to pay the head-master thirty pounds a year, and the usher twenty ; and the other charities to be paid proportionably to the revenues of the estate.

On the expiration of the two leases, in 1760, the annual revenues arising from the rents amounted to 2,336*l.* 17*s.* and the houses at will to 273*l.* ; and it was found that improvements might be made which would increase the revenue so far as to make the whole amount to 3,000*l.* a year. In fact, in 1788, they did amount to 2,917*l.* 17*s.*

Among other regulations, in consequence of the increased revenue, by an act made about the year 1762, new houses were directed to be built for the schoolmaster, usher, and writing-master. The head-master's salary to be augmented to 200*l.* per ann.; the usher's to 100*l.*; the writing-master's to 60*l.* Towards the portioning of the poor maidens, 800*l.* was to be annually given; 600*l.* to be annually given towards apprenticing poor children. And I might add several other particulars, which I omit, as not relative to the city, the subject of these sheets.

Not far from Holborn, is the church of St. George, in Bloomsbury, which, with its magnificent porch supported by pillars of the Corinthian order, placed before a plain body, and its wondrous steeple, I cannot stigmatize more strongly than in the words of Mr. Walpole, who styles it, a masterpiece of absurdity. On the tower is a pyramid, at each corner of which are the supporters of England, a lion and an unicorn alternata, the first with its heels upwards: the pyramid finishes with the statue of George I. The architect was Nicholas Hawksmoor. The church was consecrated in 1731: and is a parish taken out of that of St. Giles. Bloomsbury-square was, in the beginning of this century, the residence of many of our nobility; in later times, that of the more wealthy gentlemen of the long robe.

ST. GEORGE'S
BLOOMSBURY.

WE now enter again on the stormy latitude of the law. Lincoln's-Inn is left a little to the south. Chancery-lane gapes on the same side, to receive the numberless malheureux, who plunge unwarily on the rocks and shelves with which it abounds.

GRAY'S-INN. The antient seminary of the law, Gray's-Inn, stands on the north side. It was originally the residence of the lord Grays, from the year 1315, when John, the son of Reginold de Grey, resided here, till the latter end of the reign of Henry VII. when it was sold, by Edmund lord Grey of Wilton, to Hugh Denny, esq; by the name of the manor of Portpole; and in eight years afterward it was disposed of to the prior and convent of Shene, who again disposed of it to the students of the law. Not but that they were seated here much earlier, it appearing that they resided here under a lease from the lord Grays as early as the reign of *Edward III. It is a very extensive building, and has large gardens belonging to it. Gray's-Inn-Lane is to the east. I there observed, at a stone-mason's, a manufactory of stone coffins quite à l'antique, such as we sometimes dig up in conventual ruins, or old churches. I enquired whether they were designed for any particular persons, but was told that they were only for chance customers, who thought they should lie more securely lodged in stone than in wood.

* Origines Judiciales, 272.

NEAR the entrance into Chancery-lane were the bars : * adjacent stood the Old Temple, founded in 1118, the first seat of the knights templars, before they removed to the New Temple. About the year 1595, one Agaster Roper, † who was engaged in building on the spot, discovered the ruins of the old church, which was of a circular form, and built of stone brought from Caen in Normandy.

THE OLD
TEMPLE.

BETWEEN Chancery-lane and Turnstile is to be seen a sign which I thought only existed in one of the prints of the humorous Hogarth ; I mean, that of St. John's head in a charger, inscribed GOOD EATING WITHIN : but here, instead of the inviting inscription of the droll artist, the publican blunts the oddity of his sign by the two words, Calvert's Entire.

A LITTLE beyond are Southampton-Buildings, on the site of Southampton-house, the mansion of the Wriothesleys earls of Southampton. The King's-head tavern, facing Holborn, is the only part of it which now remains : the chapel to the house was lately rented by Mr. Lockyer Davis,

SOUTHAMP-
TON-HOUSE.

* In 1533 (Henrici VIII. 25. cap. 8) it was enacted, that the High-street between Holborn-bridge and the barrs at the west end of the said street, shall be paved on both sides with paving stone, at the expence of the tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life ; and like order shall be observed for paving the streets in Southwark. as a magazine for books. Here ended his days Thomas, the last earl of that title, the faithful virtuous servant of Charles I. and lord treasurer in the beginning of the reign of the ungrateful son. He died in 1667, barely in possession of the white rod, which his profligate enemies were with difficulty dissuaded from wresting out of his dying hands. He had the happiness of marrying his daughter and heiress to a nobleman of congenial merit, the ill-fated lord Russel. Her virtues underwent a fiery trial, and came out of the test, if possible, more pure. I cannot read of her last interviews with her devoted lord, without the strongest emotions. Her greatness of mind appears to uncommon advantage. The last scene is beyond the power of either pen or pencil. In this house they lived many years. When his lordship passed by it in the way to execution, he felt a momentary bitterness of death in recollecting the happy moments of the place. He looked towards Southampton-house: the tear started into his eye, but he instantly wiped it away.*

BROOK-
HOUSE.

Not far from hence, on the north side, in the street called Brook-street, was Brook-house, the residence of Sir Fulke Greville lord Brook, the nobleman whose chief ambition was to be thought, as he caused to be expressed on his tomb at War- wick, the friend of Sir Philip Sidney. He was a man of abilities, and a particular patron of learned men; who repayed his bounty, by what cost them little, numbers of flattering dedications. He died by the hand of Ralph Haywood, a gentleman who had passed most of his days in his lordship's service. For some reason unknown, he had left him out of his will, and was weak enough to let him know of it. In September, 1628, Haywood entered his lord's bedchamber, and, expostulating with great warmth on the usage he met with, his lordship answering with asperity, received from him a mortal wound with a sword. The assassin retired into another room, in which he instantly destroyed himself with the same instrument. His lordship languished a few days, and, after gratefully making another codicil, to reward his surgeons and attendants for their care, died in his 75th year.*

* Introduction to lady Rachael Russel's letters, octavo, p. lxxvi.

In this neighborhood, on each side of Holborn, is a tremendous array of inns of court. Next to Brook-street, is Furnivals-Inn, one of the hosteries belonging to Lincoln's-Inn, in old times the town abode of the lord Furnivals, extinct in the male line in the 6th of Richard II. Thavies-Inn was another, old as the time of Edward III. It took its name from John Tavye; who directed, that, after the decease of his wife Alice, his estates, and the Hospicium in quo apprentici ad legem habitare solebant, should be sold in order to maintain a chaplain, who was to pray for his soul and that of his spouse. It has of late years been pulled down and converted into a neat court.

A THIRD is Staples-Inn, so called from its having been a staple in which the wool merchants were used to assemble: but it had given place to students in law, possibly before the reign of

And a fourth is Barnard's-Inn, originally Mackworth's-Inn, having been given by the executors of John Mackworth, dean of Lincoln, to the dean and chapter of Lincoln, on condition that they should find a pious priest to perform divine service in the cathedral of Lincoln, in which John Mackworth lies interred. As to Scroop's-Inn, it was an inn for serjeants at law, in the time of Richard II.; it took its name from having once been the town-house of one of the lord Scroops, of Bolton. It is now an extinct volcano, and the crater used as a quiet court, bearing its antient name.

JOHN GERARD, the most celebrated of our antient botanists, had his garden in Holborn. The first of his publications was the catalogue of the plants he had growing in his own garden. It was published by J. Norton, in 1596, quarto; and a second time in 1599. The garden contained nearly eleven hundred species, and seems to have been the first of the kind in our island. Gerard was patronised by several of the first characters of the time : during twenty years he superintended the garden of the great statesman lord Burleigh ; on his death, he found in Sir Walter Raleigh another patron : and the same in lord Edward Zouch, and lord Hunsdon, lord high treasurer of England. All those noblemen were much smitten with the useful and agreeable study of botany.*

HATTON-STREET, the late Hatton-garden, succeeded to the town-house and gardens of the lord Hattons, founded by Sir Christopher Hatton, lord keeper in the reign of queen Elizabeth. He first attracted the royal notice by his fine person, and fine dancing ; but his intellectual accomplishments were far from superficial. He discharged his great office with applause ; but, distrusting his legal abilities, never acted without the assistance of two able lawyers. The place he built his house upon, was the orchard and garden belonging to Ely-house. Here Sir Christopher died in 1591, and was interred in the cathedral of St. Paul's. By his interest with the queen he extorted the ground from the bishop, Richard Cox, who for a long time resisted the sacrilege. Her letter to the poor bishop was dictated in terms as insolent as indecent.

THIS palace was long before distinguished by the death of a much greater man ; for, at this house of the bishop of Ely, say historians, John duke of Lancaster, otherwise John of Gaunt, breathed his last, in 1399, after (according to Shakespeare) giving his dying fruitless admonition to his dissipated nephew Richard II. It was possibly lent to him, during the long possession that bishop Fordham had of the see, after the duke's own palace, the Savoy, was burnt by the insurgents.

ELY-HOUSE. ADJACENT stood, in my memory, Ely-house, the residence of the bishops of Ely. John de Kirkby, who died bishop of Ely, in 1290, laid the foundation of this palace, by bequeathing several messuages in this place ; others were purchased by his successor William de Luda ; at length the whole, consisting of twenty, some say of forty acres, was inclosed within a wall. Holinshed has recorded the excellency of the strawberries cultivated in the garden by bishop Morton. He informs us that Richard duke of Glocester (afterward Richard III.) at the council held in the Tower, on the morning he put Hastings to death, requested a dish of them from the bishop. Mr. Grose has given us two representations of the buildings and chapel. Here was a most venerable hall, seventy-four feet long, lighted with six gothic windows; and all the furniture suited the hospitality of the times: this room the serjeants at law frequently borrowed to hold their feasts in, on account of its size. In the year 1531, eleven gentlemen, who had just been honored with the coif, gave a grand feast here five days successively. On the first, the king and his queen, Catherine of Arragon, graced them with their presence. For quantity of provisions it resembled a coronation feast: the minutiae are not given; but the following particular of part will suffice* to shew its greatness, as well as the wonderful scarcity of money in those days, evinced by the smallness of the prices compared to those of the present day:

CHAPEL. THE chapel (which was dedicated to St. Etheldreda, foundress of the monastery at Ely) has at the east end a very handsome gothic window, which looks into a neat court, lately built, called Ely-place. Beneath is a crypt of the length of the chapel. The cloisters formed a square on the south side.

THE several buildings belonging to this palace falling into ruin, it was thought proper to enable, by act of parlement, in 1772, the bishop to alienate the whole. It was accordingly sold to the crown, for the sum of six thousand five hundred pounds, together with an annuity of two hundred pounds a year, to be payed to the bishop and his successors for ever. Out of the first, five thousand six hundred was applied towards the purchase of Albemarle-house, in Dover-street, with other messuages and gardens. The remainder, together with three thousand pounds paid as dilapidations by the executors of bishop Mawson, was applied towards building the handsome house at present occupied, in Dover-street, by my respected friend the present prelate.* This was named Ely-house, and is settled on the bishops of Ely for ever. It was the fortune of that munificent prelate Edmund Keene, to rebuild or repair more ecclesiastical houses than any churchman of modern days. He bestowed most considerable repairs on the parsonage house of Stanhope, in the bishoprick of Durham. He wholly rebuilt the palace at Chester. He restored almost from ruin that at Ely; and, finally, Ely-house, in Dover-street, was built under his inspection.

part of the life of Henry VIII.; a fiery zealot, who, not content with seeing the amiable innocent Anne Askew put to the torture, for no other crime than difference of faith; flung off his gown, degraded the chancellor into the Bourreau, and with his own hands gave force to the rack.* He was created earl of Southampton, just before the coronation of Edward VI.; but, obstinately adhering to the old religion, he was dismissed from his post; and confined to Southampton-house, where he died in 1550.

THE well-known party tool Doctor Sacheverel was rector of this church. He had the chance of meeting in his parish a person as turbulent as himself, the noted Mr. Whiston: that singular character took it into his head to disturb the doctor, while he was in his pulpit venting some doctrine contrary to the opinion of that heterodox man. The doctor in great wrath descended from on high, and fairly turned wicked Will. Whiston out of church. Before I quit this long street, let me add, that Holeburne was, at the time of forming the Domesday-book, a manor belonging to the king.

detect the murderer of the body it lately inhabited, by its appearance in the vault of St. John's church, Clerkenwell. The credulity of the English nation was most fully displayed, by the great concourse of people of all ranks, to hear the conversation held by one of the cheats with the ghost. It ended in full detection and exemplary punishment of the several persons concerned in the villainy.

SMITHFIELD is celebrated on several accounts : SMITHFIELD. at present, and long since, for being the great market for cattle of all kinds. For being the place where Bartholomew-fair was kept ; which BARTHOLOMEW-FAIR. was granted, during three days annually, by Henry II. to the neighboring priory. It was long a season of great festivity ; theatrical performances by the better actors were exhibited here, and it was frequented by a great deal of good company ; but, becoming the resort of the debauched of all denominations, certain regulations took place, which in later days have spoiled the mirth, but produced the desired decency. The humours of this place will never be lost, as long as the inimitable print of Bartholomew-fair,* of our Hogarth, shall exist.

For a long series of reigns, Smithfield was the field of gallant tilts and tournaments : and also the spot on which accusations were decided by duel, derived from the Kamp-fight ordeal of the

* Or rather Southwark Fair : but the same humours might be found in both.

Saxons. Here, in 1374, the doating hero Edward III. in his sixty-second year, infatuated by the charms of Alice Pierce, placed her by his side in a magnificent car, and, styling her the Lady of the Sun, conducted her to the lists, followed by a train of knights, each leading by the bridle a beautiful palfrey, mounted by a gay damsel: and for seven days together exhibited the most splendid justs in indulgence of his disgraceful passion.

His grandson, Richard II. in the same place held a tournament equally magnificent. "There issued out of the Towre of London," says the admiring Froissart, "fyrst threescore coursers apparelled for the justes, and on every one a squyer of honour riding a soft pase. Than issued out threescore ladyes of honoure mounted on fayre palfreyes, and every lady led a knight by a cheyne of silver, which knights were apparelled to just." I refer to my author* for the rest of the relation of this splendid spectacle; certainly there was a magnificence and spirit of gallantry in the dissipation of those early times, which cherished a warlike and generous spirit in the nobility and gentry of the land. Something like is now arising, in the brilliant societies of archers in most parts of Britain, which, it is to be hoped, will at lest share the hours consumed in the enervated pleasures of music ; or the dangerous waste of time in the hours dedicated to cards.

THE only duel I shall mention is that in which FOR TRIALS
BY DUEL. the unfortunate Armourer entered into the lists, on account of a false accusation of treason, brought against him by his apprentice, in the reign of Henry VI. The friends of the defendant had so plied him with liquor, that he fell an easy conquest to his accuser. Shakespeare has worked this piece of history into a scene, in the second part of Henry VI. but has made the poor Armourer confess his treasons in his dying moments : for in the time in which this custom prevailed, it never was even suspected but that guilt must have been the portion of the vanquished. Let me add, that when people of rank fought with sword and lance, Plebeian combatants were only allowed a pole, armed with a heavy sand-bag, with which they were to decide their guilt or innocence.

IN Smithfield were also held our Autos de Fè ; FOR EXECUTIONS. but, to the credit of our English monarchs, none were ever known to attend the ceremony. Even Philip II. of Spain never honored any, of the many which were celebrated by permission of his gentle queen, with his presence, notwithstanding he could behold the roasting of his own subjects with infinite self-applause, and sang-froid. A stone marks the spot, in this area, on which those cruel exhibitions were executed. Here our martyr Latimer preached patience to friar Forest, agonizing under the torture of a slow fire, for denying the king's supremacy : and to this place our martyr Cranmer compelled the amiable Edward, by forcing his reluctant hand to the warrant, to send Joan Bocher, a silly woman, to the stake. Yet Latimer never thought of his own conduct in his last moments; nor did Cranmer thrust his hand into the fire for a real crime, but for one which was venial through the frailty of human nature.

OUR gracious Elizabeth could likewise burn people for religion. Two Dutchmen, anabaptists, suffered in this place in 1575, and died, as Holmes sagely remarks, with "roring and crieing."* But let me say, that this was the only instance we have of her exerting the blessed prerogative of the writ de Hæretico comburendo. Her highness preferred the halter : her sullen sister, faggot and fire. Not that we will deny but Elizabeth made a very free use of the terrible act of her 27th year : a hundred and sixty-eight suffered in her reign, at London, York, in Lancashire, and several other parts of the kingdom, convicted of being priests, of harbouring priests, or of becoming converts.† But still there is a balance of a hundred and nine against us in the article persecution, and that, by the agonizing death of fire : for the smallest number estimated to have suffered under the savage Mary, amounts, in her short reign, to two hundred and seventy-seven.*

THE last person who suffered at the stake in England was Bartholomew Legatt, who was burnt here in 1611, as a blasphemous heretic, according to the sentence pronounced by John King, bishop of London. The bishop consigned him to the secular arm of our monarch James, who took care to give to the sentence full effect.†—This place, as well as Tyburn, was called The Elms, and used for the execution of malefactors even before the year 1219.—In the year 1530, there was a most severe and singular punishment inflicted here on one John Roose, a cook, who had poisoned seventeen persons of the bishop of Rochester's family, two of whom died, and the rest never recovered their health. His design was against the pious prelate Fisher, who at that time resided at Rochester-place, at Lambeth. The villain was acquainted with the cook, and, coming into the bishop's kitchen, took an opportunity, while the cook's back was turned to fetch him some drink, to fling a great quantity of poison into the gruel which was prepared for dinner for the bishop's family and the poor of the parish. The good bishop escaped. Fortunately, he that day had abstained from food. The humility and temperance of that good man is strongly marked in this relation, for he partook of the same ordinary food with the most wretched pauper. By a retrospective law, Roose was sentenced to be boiled to death, which was done accordingly.—In 1541, Margaret Davie, a young woman, suffered in the same place and manner, for poisoning her mistress, and divers other persons.*—In Smithfield the arch-rebel Wat Tyler met, in 1381, with the reward of his treason and insolence. The youthful king, no longer able to bear his brutality, ordered him to be arrested; when the gallant Wakworth, lord mayor of London, struck him off his horse, and the attendants of the monarch quickly put him to death.

OF WILLIAM PENNANT.

I CANNOT help indulging myself with the mention of William Pennant, an honest goldsmith, my great great great great great great uncle, who, at his house, the Queen's-head in Smithfield, acquired a considerable fortune towards the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth, and the beginning of that of James I. It appears by his will, dated May 4th, 1607, that he was employed by the court, for numbers of his legacies were to the royal servants. His legacy to Sir William Fortescue, knight, his wife's brother, has now a singular appearance:—one chain of gold and pearle, weighing about 12 ounces and a quarter; one billament of gold and pearl, being 19 pieces; a round salt of silver and a cover thereto, weighing 15 ounces and somewhat more; six white silver spoons; one feather bed, bolster, two pillows, two blankets, one blue rug; a testearn of satten, figured russet and black, and vallance to the same; 5 curtains of taffety sarce-net; one chair, and a stool with a back of satten figured russet; ten black, and six stools covered with black wrought velvet; and also a great chest covered with black leather, with an in-lock and all things in it, excepting certain plate hereafter bequeathed. He left to his nephew Hugh Pennant, of Bychton, Flintshire, the manor of Morhall, in Essex, with a considerable estate; but the fruits of the labors of this industrious tradesman, were all dissipated by a gentleman of the family, who fortunately quitted this life before he had wasted our paternal acres. But the charities of William Pennant, to the poor of Whiteford parish, in the county of Flint, are more permanent: for to this day they completely cloath twenty poor people; and in a few years more the trustees of the bequeathed lands flatter themselves with the hopes of doubling the number.

WE now reach a great extent of holy ground, consecrated for the purposes of monastic life, or for the humane purpose of affording relief to our distressed brethren, in their passage through this world. I have not in view a conventual history of London: but only mean to give a brief account of those foundations which have a clame to pre-eminence. The church of St. Bartholomew the Greater is at a small distance from Smithfield; it is only the choir of the antient building, and the center on which stood the great tower. In the choir are the remains of the old architecture; massy columns, and round arches: eight arches, part of the cloisters are still preserved in a neighboring stable. Adjacent is a portion of the south transept, now converted into a small burying-ground. This was a conventual church, belonging to a priory of Black Canons, founded in 1102, by one Rahere, minstrel or jester to Henry I; who, quitting his profligate life, became the first prior of his own foundation. Legend relates, that he had a most horrible dream, out of which he was relieved by St. Bartholomew himself, who directed him to found the house, and to dedicate it to him. Rahere has here a handsome monument, beneath an arch divided by elegant tabernacle-work. His figure is recumbent, with an angel at his feet, and a canon in a great hood kneeling on each side, as if praying over him. It was afterward repaired by William Bolton, the last prior. At the Dissolution its revenues, according to Dugdale, were 65*l.* 15*s.* It was granted by Henry to Sir Richard Rich. Queen Mary re-peopled it with Black, or Preaching Friars; but on the accession of Elizabeth, they were turned out. Rich, lord chancellor in the reign of Edward VI. made the part called Cloth Fair, his place of residence. It continued in his family, and became the residence of Robert Rich earl of Warwick, of whom the earl of Clarendon draws so disadvantageous a character. His lordship paints him as a man of a pleasant and companionable wit and conversation, and such a license in his words, and in his actions, that a man of less virtue could not be found out: yet, by making his house the rendezvous of all the silenced ministers; by spending a good part of his estate, of which he was very prodigal, upon them; and by being present with them at their devotions, and by making himself merry with them, and at them, which they dispensed with, he became the head of that party, and got the style of a godly man.*

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S hospital will ever be a monument of the piety of Rahere; for from him it took its origin. On a waste spot, he obtained a grant of a piece of ground from his master, and built on it an hospital for a master, brethren, and sisters; and for the entertainment of poor diseased people, till they got well; of distressed women big with child, till they were delivered, and were able to go abroad; and for the support of all such children whose mothers died in the house, till they attained the age of seven years. It was given to the neighboring priory, who had the care of it. Its revenues at the Dissolution were 305*l.*, according to Dugdale. The good works of Rahere live to this day. The foundation was continued through successive reigns. The present handsome building, which surrounds a square, was begun in 1729. The extent of the charity is shewn, by saying, that in the last year there were under the care of the hospital three thousand seven hundred and fifty in-patients; and eight thousand one hundred and twenty-three* out-patients.

THE great staircase is admirably painted by Hogarth, at his own expence. The subjects are, the good Samaritan, and the pool of Bethesda. In another part is Rahere laying the foundation-stone; a sick man carried on a bier attended by monks. The hall is at the head of the staircase, a very large room, ornamented with a full-length of Henry VIII. who had good reason to be com-

* This number probably comprehends the whole of the in as well as the out-patients. In 1809 were admitted, cured, and discharged, 3,849 in-patients, and 4,540 out-patients; many of whom were relieved with money, clothes, and other necessities, to enable them to return to their several habitations. plimented, as he presented this house to the citizens. Here is also a portrait of Charles II. done by J. Baptist Gaspers, called Lely's Baptist. Doctor Ratcliffe is also here at full-length.* He left five hundred pounds a year to this hospital, for the improvement of the diet; and one hundred a year for buying linen. Happy had all his wealth been so directed, instead of wasting it on that vain mausoleum, his library at Oxford. The patron saint has over the chimney-piece his portrait, but not in the offensive circumstances which Spagnolet would have placed it in; for he is cloathed, and has only the knife, the symbol of his martyrdom, in his hand. In the windows is painted Henry VIII. delivering the charter to the lord mayor; by him is prince Arthur, and two noblemen with white rods.

At no great distance from this hospital stands (within the walls of the city) that of Christ-church; a royal foundation for orphans and poor children, who are taken care of, and apprenticed, at different ages, to proper trades. It was originally the house of the Grey Friars, or Mendicants, of the order of St. Francis, founded by John Ewin, mercer, about the year 1225. The church was reckoned one of the most superb of the conventual ; and rose by the contributions of the opulent devout. Margaret, daughter of Philip the Hardy, and second queen to Edward I. in 1306 began the choir. Isabella, queen to Edward II. gave threescore and ten pounds ; and queen Philippa, wife of Edward III. gave threescore and two pounds, towards the building. John de Bretagne, duke of Richmond, built the body of the church, at a vast expence : and Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, gave twenty great beams out of his forest at Tunbridge. No order of monks seems to have had the powers of persuasion equal to these poor friars. They raised vast sums for their buildings among the rich : and there were few of their admirers, when they came to die, who did not console themselves with the thoughts of lying within their expiating walls ; and, if they were particularly wicked, thought themselves secure against the assault of the devil, provided their corpse was wrapped in the habit and cowl of a friar.

MULTITUDES therefore of all ranks were crowded in this holy ground. It boasts of receiving four queens ; Margaret, and Isabella, above mentioned ; Joan, daughter to Edward II. and wife of Edward Bruce, king of Scotland ; and, to make the fourth, Isabella wife of William Warren, titular queen of Man, is named. Of these, Isabella, whom GRAY so strongly stigmatizes,

She-wolf of France, with untelenting fangs,
That tear'd the bowels of thy mangled mate,

I hope was wrapped in the friars garment, for few stood more in need of a dæmonifuge. With wonderful hypocrisy she was buried with the heart of her murdered husband on her breast.*

HERE also rest Beatrix, daughter of Henry III. and dutchess of Bretagney. Isabella, daughter of Edward III. and wife of Ingelram de Courcy, created earl of Bedford. John Hastings, earl of Pembroke, slain in Woodstocke-park, at a Christmas festivity, in 1389. He was then very young, and, being desirous of instruction in feats of chivalry, ran against a stout knight of the name of John Saint John: but it remains uncertain whether his death was the result of design or accident.†

John Duc de Bourbon, one of the noble prisoners taken at the battle of Azin-court, after eighteen years imprisonment, in 1443 here found a tomb. Walter Blunt lord Mountjoy, lord treasurer of England in the time of Edward IV. and many other‡ illustrious persons, were deposited here.

INTERMENTS AT CHRIST-CHURCH.

AMONG the unfortunate who fell victims to the executioner, in the wretched times of too many of our monarchs, as often unjustly as otherwise, were the following. I do not reckon, in the list of the first, the ambitious profligate Roger Mortimer, paramour of Isabella, wife to the unhappy Edward of Caernarvon. He was surprised with the queen in Nottingham castle. In vain did she cry, Bel fitz, bel fitz, ayez pitie du gentle Mortimer. He was hurried to London, and, after a summary hearing, dragged to Tyburn, where he hung like a common malefactor two days upon the gallows.

SIR Robert Tresilian, chief justice of England; and Sir Nicholas Brembre, the stout mayor of London, suffered the same ignominious death in the next reign. The first, as a warning to all judges for too great a complaisance to the pleasure of the court; Sir Nicholas, for his attachment to his royal master. Tresilian fell lamented: especially as the proceedings were hurried in a tumultuary manner, more indicative of revenge than justice. Superstition records, that when he came to Tyburn, he declared that he should not die while he had any thing about him; and that the executioner, on stripping him, found certain images, the head of a devil, and the names of divers others.* The charm was broken, and the judge died.

* See State Trials, vol. xiii. old ed.

HERE, in 1423, were interred the mangled remains of Sir John Mortimer, knight, a victim to the jealousy of the house of Lancaster against that of York. He was put to death on a fictitious charge by an ex post facto law, called the Statute of Escapes, made on purpose to destroy him: he was drawn to Tyburn, and underwent the rigorous penalty of treason.* Thus was Henry VI. stained with blood even in his infancy, and began a bloody reign with slaughter, continued to the end of his life, by ambition and cruelty not his own.

IN the same ground lies another guiltless sacrifice, Thomas Burdet, esq; ancestor of the present Sir Robert Burdet.† He had a white buck, which he was particularly fond of; this the king, Edward IV. happened to kill. Burdet, in anger, wished the horns in the person's body who had advised the king to it. For this he was tried, as wishing evil to his sovereign, and, for this only, lost his head.‡

To close the list, in 1523, a murderess, a lady Alice Hungerford, obtained the favor of lying here. She had killed her husband; for which she was led from the Tower to Holborn, there put into a cart with one of her servants, and thence carried to Tyburn and executed.§

LIBRARY AT CHRIST-CHURCH.

WITH sorrow I record, that all these antient monuments and grave-stones were sold, in 1545, by Sir Martin Bowes, lord mayor, for about fifty pounds.

ON the Dissolution, this fine church, after being spoiled of its ornaments for the king's use, was made a storehouse for French prizes: Henry, just before his death, touched with remorse, granted the convent and church to the city, and caused the church to be opened for divine service. It was burnt in 1666, and rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren, at a small distance from its former site. I must mention, that with the old church was destroyed the tomb of lady Venetia Digby.*

LIBRARY. THE library founded here in 1429, by the munificent Whittington, must not be forgotten. It was a hundred and twenty-nine feet long; thirty-one broad: it was cieled with wainscot, had twenty-eight desks, and eight double settles of wainscot. In three years it was filled with books, to the value of five hundred and fifty-six pounds: of which Sir Richard contributed four hundred pounds; and Doctor Thomas Winchelsey, a friar, supplied the rest. This about thirty years before the invention of printing.

HOSPITAL. THE buildings belonging to the friars were by Edward VI. applied to this useful charity: that amiable young prince did not require to be stimulated to good actions : but it is certain that, after a sermon of exhortation, preached before him by Ridley, bishop of London, he founded three great hospitals in this city, judiciously adapted to the necessities of the poor, divided into three classes : the hospital of St. Thomas, Southwark, for the sick or wounded poor ; this for the orphan ; and that of Bridewell for the thriftless. Charles II. founded also here a mathematical school for the instruction of forty boys, and training them up for the sea, Many able mathematicians and seamen have sprung from this institution. In the last year, a hundred and sixty-eight were apprenticed out ; of which nine were from the last-mentioned institution. The governors have a seminary to this hospital at Hertford. At London, and at Hertford are nine hundred and eighty-two children.

* My Journey to London, 335. ed. 1811, 452.—The tomb is engraven in the Antiquarian Repertory.

PART of the old buildings and cloister are yet remaining, but the greater part was rebuilt in the last century, under the direction of Sir Christopher Wren. The writing-school was founded in 1694, by Sir John Moor, alderman, who is honored with a statue in front of the building.

IN the great hall is a fine picture of Charles II. in his robes, with a great flowing black wig. At a distance is a sea view with shipping ; and about him a globe, sphere, telescope, &c. It was painted by Lely, in 1662.

HALL.

PICTURES AT CHRIST-CHURCH.

HERE is the longest picture I ever saw. King James II. amidst his courtiers, receiving the president of this hospital, several of the governors, and numbers of the children, all kneeling; one of the governors with grey hair, and some of the heads of the children, are admirably executed. Chancellor Jefferies is standing by the king. This was painted by Verrio, who has placed himself in the piece, in a long wig.

THE founder is represented in another picture sitting, and giving the charter to the governors, who are in their red gowns kneeling; the boys and girls are ranged in two rows; a bishop, possibly Ridley, is in the piece. If this was the work of Holbein, it has certainly been much injured by repair.

IN the court-room is a three-quarters length of Edward, a most beautiful portrait, indisputably by the hand of that great painter. He is most richly dressed, with one of his hands upon a dagger.

SIR WOL-
STAN DIXIE.

IN this room are the portraits of two persons of uncommon merit. The first is of Sir Wolstan Dixie, lord mayor in 1585. He is represented in a red gown furred, a rich chain, and with a rough beard. The date on his portrait is 1593. He was descended from Wolstan Dixie, who was seated at Catworth, in Huntingdonshire, about the reign of Edward III. Sir Wolstan was the founder of the family of baronets, settled at Mar- bet-Bosworth, in Leicestershire, which was bestowed by him on his great nephew, in the reign of queen Elizabeth.* Sir Wolstan was distinguished by the magnificent pageantry of his mayor's day; and by the poetical incense bestowed on the occasion by George Peele, A. M. of Christ-church College, Oxford: who, among other things, wrote the life of our last prince Llewelyn, the loves of king David and the fair Bathsheba, and the tragedy of Absalom.† But Sir Wolstan immortalized himself by his good deeds, and the greatness of his charities. At Bosworth he founded a free-school; every prison in the capital felt his bounty: he portioned poor maidens in marriage; contributed largely to build a pest-house; established two fellowships in Emanuel College, Cambridge, and two scholarships; and left to this hospital an annual endowment of forty-two pounds for ever.

BUT a lady, dame Mary Ramsay, wife of Sir Thomas Ramsay, lord mayor in 1577, greatly surpassed Sir Wolstan in her charitable deeds, by the gift of twenty pounds a year, to be annually paid to the master and usher of the school belonging to this hospital; and also to the hospital the reversion of a hundred and twenty pounds annually. She was complimented with having her picture placed in this room. She is dressed in a red-bodied gown and petticoat. She augmented fellowships and scholarships; cloathed ten maimed soldiers, at the expence of twenty pounds annually: she did not forget the prisoners in the several gaols; she gave the sum of twelve hundred pounds, to five of the companies, to be lent to young tradesmen for four years; she gave to Bristol a thousand pounds, to be laid out in an hospital; she married and portioned poor virgins; and, besides other charities which I omit, left three thousand pounds to good and pious uses. This excellent woman died about the year 1596, and was interred in the church of St. Mary Woolnoth.*

CHARTER-
HOUSE-SQUARE.

IN this square, at the time called the Charter-house Yard, was a town-house belonging to the earls of Rutland, which, in the year 1656, was converted into an opera-house, over which Sir William d' Avenant presided; † for in those times of hypocrisy, tragedies and comedies were not permitted.

CHARTER-
HOUSE.

THE Charter-house is the next object of attention. This was a house of Carthusians (whence the name is corrupted) founded by Sir Walter de Manni, a most successful commander in the French wars, under Edward III. He purchased, in the year 1349, a piece of ground consisting of thirteen acres, for the purpose of interring the dead, at a time in which a dreadful pestilence raged. Not fewer than fifty thousand people were buried in it, during the time of this dreadful calamity; which shews how very populous London must have been at that period. In the preceding year Ralph Stratford, bishop of London, bought another piece of land adjoining to this, which he enclosed with a brick wall, built on it a chapel, and applied to the same use, under the name of Pardon Church-yard. Here also were buried suicides, and such as had been executed. They were brought here in what was called the Friars cart, which was tilted, and covered over with black: in it was a pendent bell, so that notice was given, as it passed along, of the sad burden it was carrying.*

SIR WALTER first intended to found here a college for a warden, dean, and twelve secular priests; but, changing his design, he, in conjunction with Northburgh, bishop of London, founded a priory for twenty-four monks, of the rigid order of Carthusians, which was finished in 1370.† The last prior but one, John Howghton, subscribed to the king's supremacy in 1534; yet, was executed soon after, for his opposition to the royal will. Three years after that there was a second subscription, in which William Trafford, the last prior, and two-and-twenty of his house, subscribed to the king's supremacy.* At the Dissolution its revenues were reckoned, according to Dugdale, 642*l.* a year. It was first granted, in 1542, to John Bridges and Thomas Hall, for their joint lives; and in April 1555, to Sir Edward North, who sold it to Thomas duke of Norfolk, for twenty-five hundred pounds; his son the earl of Suffolk, the rapacious treasurer, alienated it to Thomas Sutton, esq; for thirteen thousand pounds.

MR. SUTTON'S FOUNDATION.

THAT gentleman made a most dignified use of his purchase. In the time of James I. he converted it into a most magnificent hospital, consisting of a master, a preacher, a head school-master, and second master, with forty-four boys, eighty decayed gentlemen, who had been soldiers or merchants, besides physician, surgeons, register, and other officers and servants of the house. Each decayed gentleman has fourteen pounds a year, a gown, meat, fire, and lodgings; and one of them may, if he chuses, attend the manciple to market, to see that he buys good provisions. This is the greatest gift in England, either in protestant or catholic times, ever bestowed by a single man, till we come to the time of the foundation of Guy's Hospital, in Southwark.

THERE is scarcely any vestige of the conventual

* Willis's Abbies, ii. 126.

building, which is said to have stood in the present garden. The present extensive house was the work of the duke of Norfolk. It was inhabited by the noble purchaser: the last time, it was made his easy prison; for, having been committed to the Tower in 1569, he was permitted to return to his own house, under the custody of Sir Henry Nevil, the plague at that time raging within the Tower liberties. But soon relapsing into his romantic design of a marriage with the unhappy Mary Stuart, he was here seized, and conveyed to his former place of confinement. In the great hall are the Howard arms, and the date 1571; the very year of his final imprisonment.

His grandson, lord Thomas Howard, was in possession of this house at the accession of James I. This monarch, to shew his respect for a family which had so severely suffered in the cause of his mother, made his first visit, on entering his new capital, on May 7th, 1604, to this nobleman. His majesty and his train were most splendidly entertained here four whole days;* at his departure, he was as profuse of his honors as he had been at Theobalds just before, for he dubbed here not fewer than fourscore knights.

In one of the great apartments is a very good half-length of Mr. Sutton, in a black gown furred, and with a white beard.—Mr. Sutton was descended from a good family in the county of Lincoln: and became, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, one of the greatest merchants in our capital. Vast as his wealth was, he was more distinguished by his integrity, generosity, and true charity than by his riches, which were all gained by fair trade, by honorable posts under government, and even by deeds of arms. In a letter of marque he took a Spanish prize, worth twenty thousand pounds. He commanded the bark called the Sutton, as a volunteer against the Spanish Armada. I will return to his charities, to mention one species, which I recommend in the strongest manner to all whom Heaven hath blessed with the luxurious power of doing good:—he was used, in dear years of grain, to buy great quantities, and to cause it to be retailed at lower prices to his poor neighbors. By this plan he relieved their wants, he took away the cause of riots, and probably prevented the rise of infectious disorders by the necessitated use of bad and unwholesome diet.

I WILL now return to the subject of this noble foundation. He himself intended to have filled the post of master; but being seized with his last illness, by deed nominated the Reverend John Hutton to the office. He died December 12th, 1611, aged 79: his body was embalmed, kept in his own house till May 1612, when it was deposited with great pomp in Christ-church; from whence, in 1614 (the chapel in his hospital being by that time finished) it was carried on the shoulders of the poor into the vault prepared for its reception. His figure, in a gown, lies recumbent on the tomb: on each side is a man in armour standing upright; and above a preacher addressing a full congregation. This was the work of Nicholas Stone, who (including a little monument to Mr. Law, one of Mr. Sutton's executors,) had four hundred pounds for his performance.*

IN the Master's apartments are portraits of the following distinguished characters.

plan of dethroning the very prince whom he had invited over. He died neglected by all parties; permanent only in the protestant religion, to which he was an early convert by the arguments of our great Tillotson. He died in February 1718, giving, almost with his last breath, assurance of his adherence to the church of England.

THE duke of Monmouth, in a long black wig, dressed like the former; but not so richly.

THE munificent Sheldon, archbishop of Canterbury, is represented sitting. He did honor to his promotion by his patron Charles II. whom he attended in his exile. He was equally conspicuous for his charity and his piety. He expended above sixty-six thousand pounds in public and private benefactions, in relieving the miserable distressed in the time of the pestilence, and in redeeming Christian slaves. His theatre at Oxford is a magnificent proof of his respect to the university in which he had most honorably presided, as warden of the College of All Souls.

HERE is a three-quarters piece of Doctor Thomas Burnet, master of this house, highly celebrated for his learning, and equally so for the spirit with which he resisted the obtrusion of a Roman catholic into the office by James II. He was the author of the famous Sacred Theory of the Earth, a beautiful and eloquent philosophical romance: and of the Archaeologia Philosophica.

This latter subjected him to such censure, for the sceptical opinions it contained, as to prevent his farther preferment. He died in 1715. He is represented as a thin man, of a good countenance, in a black gown, and short hair.

THE hero William earl Craven is the last; a full-length, in armour, with a truncheon; and a distant view of the camp.

THESE noblemen had all been governors of this great charity.

WHEN Edward lord North resided at this house, he was honored by queen Elizabeth with one of her expensive visits. She went in procession from the Tower, on July 10th, 1561, on horseback, attended by a vast train: lord Hunsdon, her kinsman, bore the sword before her: the ladies followed close behind, all on horseback. Here her highness staid four days; supped with lord Cecil on the fourth night, returned, and took leave of her host the next morning;* much, I dare say, to his satisfaction: for Elizabeth seldom visited but to drain the purses of her good subjects: for wealth, she well knew, was productive of independence: and independence, she well knew, would be productive of resistance to her arbitrary spirit.

IMMEDIATELY beyond the Charter-house, stood the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, of the warlike order of the knights hospitalers. After the taking of Jerusalem from the Saracens, there was a vast concourse of pilgrims to the holy sepulchre. A pious man of the name of Gerardus, associating with other persons of his religious turn, assumed a black garment, with a white cross on it, with eight spikes; and undertook the care of an hospital, before founded at Jerusalem, for the use of the pilgrims; and also to protect them from insults on the road, either in coming or returning. Godfrey of Boulogne first instituted the order; and, in reward of the valour of Gerardus, at the battle of Ascalon, endowed the knights with great estates, to enable them to support the object of their order: the kings of France were the sovereigns. After the loss of Jerusalem, they retired from place to place; but, having taken Rhodes, fixed there, and were then styled Knights of Rhodes. In 1522, on the loss of that island, they retreated to Malta, and were afterwards known by the name of Knights of Malta. The order, before the separation of England from the church of Rome, consisted of eight nations. The world is filled with their prodigious valour.

JORDAN BRISET, and Muriel his wife, persons of rank, founded this house in the year 1100, and it received consecration from Heraclius, patriarch of Jerusalem. This order at first styled itself servant to the poor servants of the hospital at Jeru- salem; but their vast endowments infected them with an uncommon degree of pride. The whole order had, in different parts of Christendom, nineteen thousand manors. In 1323, the revenues of the English knights templars were bestowed on them. This gave them such importance, that the prior was ranked as first baron of England, and lived in the highest state. Their luxury gave offence to the rebels of Kent and Essex, in 1381. These levellers burnt their house to the ground; but it soon rose with double splendor. The first prior was Garnerius de Neapoli; the last, Sir William Weston, who, on the suppression by Henry VIII. had a pension of a thousand pounds a year; but died of a broken heart, on Ascension-day, 1540, the very day that the house was suppressed.* Its revenue at that time, according to Dugdale, was 2,385*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*†

THE house and church remained entire during the reign of Henry, for he chose to keep in them his tents and toils for the chase. At the death of his son, the church (famous for the beauty of its tower, which was graven, gilt, and enameled) was blown up with gunpowder, by order of the protector Somerset, and the stones carried towards building his palace in the Strand. In the next reign, a part of the choir which remained, and some side-chapels, were repaired by cardinal Pole, and Sir Thomas Tresham was appointed lord prior:* but the restoration was short-lived, being again suppressed by Elizabeth.

THE buildings covered a great extent of ground; now occupied by St. John's-square. The magnificent gateway still remains; James I. granted it to Sir Roger Wilbraham, who made it his habitation.

AYLESBURY-HOUSE.

AYLESBURY-HOUSE and gardens were also part of the possessions of those knights. They were granted to the Bruces, earls of Aylesbury; who made the house their residence. Earl Robert, deputy earl-marshal, dates many of his letters, in 1671, from Aylesbury-house, Clerkenwell. Aylesbury-street now covers the site of the house and gardens.

BENEDICTINE NUNS.

THE same Jordan Briset, not satisfied with the former great endowment, gave to one Robert, a priest, fourteen acres of land, almost adjoining to the first, to build on them a religious house. He accordingly founded one to the honor of God and the assumption of our lady, which he filled with Black Nuns of the order of St. Benedict. The first prioress was Christina; the last, Isabella Sackville, of the family of the present duke of Dorset. She appointed her cousin, lord Buckhurst, executor of her will, made February 19th, 1569, if his lordship would undertake the trouble. She was buried in the conventual church; a small brass plate informs us that she died in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

SIR Thomas Chaloner, tutor to prince Henry, built a fine house in the close of the priory, and on it inscribed these apt verses,

Casta fides superest, velatæ tecta sorores

Ista relegatæ deseruere licet :

Nam venerandus Hymen hic vota jugalia servat,

THE church was made parochial. Part of the cloisters remained, at lest till very lately, as did part of the nuns' hall. In very antient records it was styled, Ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ de fonte Clericorum, from a well near it, at which the parish-clerks of London were accustomed to meet annually to perform their mysteries, or sacred dramatical plays. In 1391, they performed before the king and queen, and whole court, three days successively. These amusements, with much more substantial peace-offerings, were presented to Richard, to divert his resentment against the good citizens, for a riot of no very great moment against the bishop of Salisbury.^{*} And in 1409, they performed the creation of the world, which lasted eight days; and most of the nobility and gentry of England honored them with their presence. Near this well was another, called Skinner's well, at which the skimmers of London hold, says Stow, "certain playes yeerely, plaid of holy scripture."—But to return to the church. Besides the venerable prioress, here was interred the lord prior of the knights hospitalers abovementioned, Sir William Weston, who lies under a tomb, beneath an arch of neat gothic work. His recumbent figure is represented as greatly emaciated; above had been a cross, long since lost.† Weever preserves part of his epitaph; but it contains nothing historical.‡ That great collector of funeral monuments and inscriptions lies here himself. He died in 1634,§ aged 56, and left his own quaint epitaph:

Lankashire gave me birth, and Cambridge education,
Middlesex gave me death, and this church my humation;
 And CHRIST to me hath given
 A place with him in heaven.

§ Fuller's Worthies, 117.

HERE is a plain monument to Gilbert Burnet, bishop of Salisbury. His literary and political merits and demerits have been so fully discussed, that I rather chuse to refer the reader to the writers who have undertaken that task. Let his excellent discharge of his episcopal function expiate the errors, which his enemies, of each party, so liberally impute to him.

Now I am on the outside of the church again, let me, in this revival of archery, direct the attention of the brethren and sisters of the bow, to the epitaph of Sir William Wood, a celebrated archer, who died in 1691, æt. 82. May their longevity equal his! but when they have made their last shot, I hope that the *Royal British Bowmen have provided an abler bard, to celebrate their skill, than fell to the lot of poor William Wood.†

Sir William was marshal to a society of archers, who incorporated themselves, about the year 1676, under the title of "Finsbury Archers," in honor of Katharine the queen of king Charles II. The marshal wore a badge of silver with this circumscription, "Reginæ Katharinæ Sagitarii;" and the device on it was an archer drawing a bow in relief. The weight of the badge was 25 oz. 5 dwts.; and was given by contribution when the society was instituted. These Finsbury Archers revived the titles of Duke of Shoreditch, Earl of Pancras, &c. and therefore honored their marshal with an imaginary Knighthood. Mr. Granger had seen a print of this William Wood.* Mr. Bar-rington, in his memoir on archery (Archaeol. vol. vii.) says, that the badge had, on the reverse, the arms of England impaling Portugal, supported by two bow-men. Wood published a thin octavo of 80 pages (A. D. 1682) called "The Bow-man's Glory," which, from the present rage for archery, has been sold, within these two years, for a guinea and a half.

ALBEMARLE-
HOUSE.

CLOSE to Clerkenwell-green, stands Albemarle, or Newcastle-house; the property and residence of the mad dutchess, widow of the second duke of Albemarle, and last surviving daughter and co-heiress of Henry Cavendish duke of Newcastle, who died here in 1734. At p. 244, some account is given of this lady. The house is entire, and at present occupied by a cabinet-maker. In the garden is one side of the cloister of the numnery, part of the wall, and a door belonging to the nuns' hall. Scattered over the ground are the remains of the antient monuments of Sir William Weston, and others, shamefully ruined, being flung here during the rebuilding of the church.

OPPOSITE to this house is another, very large, ascended to by a long flight of steps. It is now divided into three houses. It is called Oliver Cromwell's; and tradition says, it was his place of conference with Ireton, Bradshaw, and others. If it had been his residence, it probably was usurped from some of the loyalists, and made his mansion, before he attained his fullness of power, and lived in regal state at Whitehall.

CROMWELL-
HOUSE.

IN the fields, at a small distance from Clerkenwell, is the New River Head, the great repository which supplies the largest portion of our capital with water. To extend the supply, another reservoir was made on the heights, at a little distance to the north, into which the water is forced by a steam engine; from hence it streams down to places which the other had not the power of benefiting. These reservoirs may be called the HEART of the work. The element, essentially useful as the vital fluid, at first rushes through veins of vast diameter; divides into lesser; and again into thousands of ramifications, which support the life of this most populous city.

NEW RIVER
HEAD.

No one ought to be ignorant that this unspeakable benefit is owing to a WELSHMAN! Sir HUGH MIDDLETON, of Denbigh; who, on September 20th, 1608, began, and on September 29th, 1613, completed the great work. He brought the water from Amwell, in Hertfordshire, a distance of twenty, but, from the necessity of making a detour to avoid hills and vallies, it was increased to thirty-eight miles three quarters and sixteen poles. Yet it was impossible to escape difficulties. His darling spirit penetrated the hills in several places : and carried the river over two vallies. Over one it extended six hundred and sixty feet in length, and thirty in height : and over another, four hundred and sixty-two feet in length. The original source of this river was, by the vast increase of London, found inadequate to its wants. The New River company found it necessary to have recourse to another supply. They applied to parliament for powers to obtain it from the river Lee, the property of the city. London opposed the benefit intended its inhabitants ; but in vain ! parliament wisely determined against their objections : so the blessing was forced upon them ! and the river Lee supplies the greater part of the wants of the city. Sir HUGH MIDDLETON was ruined by the execution of his project. So little was the benefit understood, that, for above thirty years, the seventy-two shares, it was divided into, produced only five pounds apiece. Each of these shares was sold originally for a hundred pounds. Within this twelvemonth they were sold at nine thousand pounds a share ; and lately at ten thousand : and are increasing, because their profits increase, on which the dividends are grounded.* Half of the seventy-two shares are called king's shares, and are in less estimation than the others, because subject to a grant of five hundred pounds a year, made so long ago as the reign of James I. when the water was first brought to London, or soon after.

I now descend to the Temple, and resume my journey along Fleet-street, as far as the southern extremity of the walls of London, the antient precinct. I shall follow them to their opposite end near the Tower; describe their neighboring suburbs, and the parts of the city bordering on their interior sides. These, with the city itself, will be last described, together with the suburbs which point to Blackwall, and form a street of an amazing extent.

Just beyond the entrance into Chancery-lane, is St. Dunstan's church. The saint to whom it is dedicated was a person of great ingenuity; and excelled in painting, engraving, and music. From the following lines it appears that he was the inventor of the Æolian harp:

* Their value of late years is said to have been considerably diminished, in consequence of the rival supply furnished by the Grand Junction Canal, and the West Company water-works. The dividend, however, which in 1633 was only 15*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* increased in 1794 to 431*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* and in 1809 to 472*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Ed.

For this he was represented to king Athelstan as a conjuror. He was an excellent workman in brass and iron. It was when thus employed at his forge, that he seized the devil by the nose with the red-hot tongs, till he roared again. The dæmon visited him in a female form, and suffered for intruding on this woman-hating saint.

HIS church is probably of very antient foundation: yet the first mention of it is in 1237, when the abbot and convent of Westminster bestowed it on Henry III; who gave the profits to the Domus Conversorum, or the house for converted Jews. The two figures of savages on the outside of the clock, striking the quarters with their clubs, were set up in 1671, and are much admired by the gaping populace.

NEXT to the Temple, is another Serjeant's-Inn, destined, originally, for the same purpose as that in Chancery-lane. And nearer to the Thames, a little east of the King's-Bench Walks, stood the church and convent of Carmelites, or White Friars; founded in 1241, by Sir Richard Grey, ancestor of the lord Greys of Codnor. Edward I, bestowed on them more ground, that they might enlarge their buildings. The order originated from the hermits of Mount Carmel, who inhabited the mountain which Elias and Eliseus, Elijah and Elisha, inhabited. On the Dissolution its revenues were 63*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* Part of the house was granted by Henry to Richard Moresque; and the chapter-house, and other parts, to his physician William Butts, immortalized by Shakespeare. Edward VI. bestowed the house inhabited by Dr. Butts, together with the church, on the bishop of Worcester, and his successors. It was afterward demolished, with all its tombs, and several houses, inhabited in the reign of Edward VI. by people of fashion. That church was built by Sir Robert Knolles, a great warrior in the time of Edward III. and Richard II.; who was honorably interred here in 1407; as was John Mowbray, earl of Nottingham, in 1382, in his youthful years; and also Elizabeth, wife of Henry, earl of Kent, who had wasted his substance by gaming. That noble family had for some time a house in the White Friars. John lord Gray, son to Reginald lord Gray, of Wilton, in 1418: and numbers of others of the common gentry repose here.

fected piety and morality, mingled with those numerous weaknesses and prejudices which his friends have kindly taken care to draw from their dread abode. I brought on myself his transient anger, by observing, that in his tour in Scotland he once had "long and woeful experience of" oats being the food of men in Scotland, as they "were of horses in England." It was a national reflection unworthy of him, and I shot my bolt. In return he gave me a tender hug.* Con amore, he also said of me, The dog is a Whig.† I admired the virtues of lord Russel, and pitied his fall. I should have been a Whig at the Revolution. There have been periods since, in which I should have been, what I now am, a moderate Tory; a supporter, as far as my little influence extends, of a well-poised balance between the crown and people: but, should the scale preponderate against the Salus populi, that moment may it be said, The dog's a Whig!

SALISBURY-
COURT.

FARTHER to the west of White Friars, is Salisbury-court, once the inn or city mansion of the bishops of Salisbury; afterward of the Sackvilles: held at first by a long lease from the see, and then alienated by bishop Jewel, for a valuable consideration from that great family. It was successively called Sackville-house, and Dorset-house. The great lord Buckhurst, created by James I. earl of Dorset, wrote here his Porrex and Ferrex, a tragedy, which was performed at Whitehall, before queen Elizabeth. He was equally great as a statesman and author. Here also died two of his successors : the last was the gallant earl (of whom lord Clarendon gives so great a character) who retired here on the murder of his royal master, and never after quitted the place.

DORSET-
HOUSE.

THE house being pulled down, was succeeded by other buildings, among which was a magnificent theatre, built after the Restoration, by Sir Christopher Wren; in which the company of comedians, called the duke of York's servants, performed under the patentee, Sir William Davenant. Here Betterton, and the best actors of the time, entertained the public, till its taste grew so depraved that the new manager, Doctor Davenant, was obliged to call in old music and rich scenery, to support his house.

THEATRE.

THE church of St. Bride's, with its fine steeple, built by the same great architect, but lost in the various houses of the street, stands farther on, on the south side. It is dedicated to St. Bridget; whether she was Irish, or whether she was Scotch; whether she was maiden, or whether she was wife, I will not dare to determine. Her church was originally small: but, by the piety of William Viner, warden of the Fleet, about the year 1480, it was enlarged with a body and side-aisles, and ornamented with grapes and vine-leaves, in allusion to his name. It was destroyed by the great fire, and rebuilt soon after in its present form.

Not far from this church lived the famous printer, Wynkyn de Worde, at his inn or house, the Faulcon; but I find he enprynted his Frutye of Tymes, in 1515, at the sygne of the sonne, in Fleet-street.*

BRIDEWELL. Not far from the White Friars, near the west side of Fleet-ditch, was a well, dedicated to St. Bride, or Bridget. This gave name to the parish-church, and the antient palace of Bridewell, which was honored with the residence of several of our monarchs, even as early as king John. It was formed partly out of the remains of an antient castle, the western Arx Palatina of the city, which stood near the little river Fleet, near to the Thames. In 1087, William the Conqueror gave many of the choicest materials towards the rebuilding of St. Paul's cathedral, which had been destroyed by fire. And Henry I. gave as many of the stones, from the walls of the castle-yard, as served to inclose and form the gates and precinct of the church. Notwithstanding this, the dwelling remained, and became the residence of several of our monarchs.* It remained neglected till cardinal Wolsey resided here, in 1522. To this palace that arbitrary prince convened all the abbots, and other heads of religious houses, English and foreign, and squeezed out of them a hundred thousand pounds; in those days an enormous sum. From the Cistercians, who would not own his supremacy, he extorted not less than thirty-three thousand. Henry VIII. rebuilt the palace in the space of six weeks, in a most magnificent manner, for the reception of the emperor Charles V. who visited England in 1522. After all the expence, the emperor lodged in Black Friars, and his suite in the new palace; a gallery of communication was flung over the ditch, and a passage cut through the city wall into the emperor's apartments. The king often lodged here, particularly in 1529, when the question of his marriage with queen Catherine was agitated at Black Friars. It fell afterwards into decay, and was begged by the pious prelate Ridley, from Edward VI. to be converted to some charitable purpose. That of a house of correction was determined upon, for vagabonds of each sex and all denominations. The first time I visited the place, there was not a single male prisoner, and about twenty female.

CORREC-TION.

They were confined on a ground-floor, and employed in beating hemp. When the door was opened, by the keeper, they ran towards it like so many hounds in kennel, and presented a most moving sight: about twenty young creatures, the eldest not exceeding sixteen, many of them with angelic faces, divested of every angelic expression; featured with impudence, impenitency; and profligacy; and clothed in the silken tatters of squalid finery. A magisterial! a national opprobrium!!!—What a disadvantageous contrast to the Spinhuis, in Amsterdam, where the confined sit under the eye of a matron spinning or sewing, in plain and neat dresses, provided by the public. No trace of their former lives appears in their countenances; a thorough reformation seems to have been effected, equally to the emolument and honor of the republic.—This is also the place of confinement for disobedient and idle apprentices. They are kept separate, in airy cells; and have an allotted task to be performed in a certain time. They, the men and women, are employed in beating hemp, picking oakum, and packing goods, and are said to earn their maintenance.

A HOUSE OF INDUSTRY.

BRIDEWELL is not only a prison for the dissolute, but an hospital for the education of the industrious youth. Here twenty Arts masters (as they are styled) consisting of decayed tradesmen, such as shoe-makers, taylor, flax-dressers, and very fine portraits of Charles II. sitting, and James II. standing, by Lely. Also, a picture of Slingsby Bethel, esq. lord mayor in 1756; the last work of the painter Hudson.*

THE creek, called Fleet-ditch, had its entrance from the Thames immediately below Bridewell; and reached as far as Holborn-bridge, at the foot of Holborn-hill; and received into it the little river Fleet, Turnmill brook, and another called Old-bourn, which gave name to that vast street. The tide flowed up as high as Holborn-bridge, and brought up barges of considerable burden. Over it were four stone bridges, and on the sides extensive quays and warehouses. It was of such utility, that it was scoured and kept open at a vast expence; and, not later than 1606, nearly twenty-eight thousand pounds were expended for that purpose.

FLEET-
DITCH.

IN the performing of this work, at the depth of fifteen feet, were found several Roman utensils; and a little deeper, a great quantity of Roman coins, in silver, copper, brass, and other metals, but none in gold. At Holborn-bridge were found two brazen Lares, about four inches long; one a Bacchus, the other a Ceres. It is a probable conjecture that these were thrown in by the affrighted Romans, at the approach of the enraged Boadicea, who soon took ample revenge on her insulting conquerors. Here were also discovered numbers of Saxon antiquities, spurs, weapons, keys, seals, &c.; also medals, crosses, and crucifixes, which might likewise have been flung in on occasion of some alarm.

FLEET-
MARKET.

THIS canal being afterward neglected, and becoming a nuisance, was filled up, and a sewer formed beneath to convey the water to the river. The fine market, which extends the whole length of the old ditch, rose in its place in 1739; in which year an act was passed to empower the lord mayor and citizens to fill up the ditch at their own expence, and to vest the fee-simple of the ground in them and their successors for ever. I recollect the present noble approach to Blackfriars-bridge, the well-built opening of CHATHAM-PLACE, a muddy and genuine ditch. This was the mouth of the creek, which, as Stow informs us, in 1307 was of depth and width sufficient "that ten or twelve ships navies at once, with merchandizes, were wont to come to the afore-said bridge of Fleete."* It must be recollected, that at this period there were drawbridges upon London-bridge, through which ships of a certain sire might pass, and discharge their cargoes in the mouth of the Fleet.

* Survais of London, p. 15.

THIS end of Blackfriars-bridge now fills the filthy mouth of Fleet-ditch. This elegant structure was built after the design of Mr. Robert Mylne. It consists of nine arches, the center of which is a hundred feet wide. The whole length nine hundred and ninety-five feet; the breadth of the carriage-way twenty-eight feet; of the two foot-ways, seven each. Over each pier is a recess, an apology for the beautiful pairs of ionic pillars which support them. The effect of this singular application of columns is beautiful from the river. The equinoctial tides rise here to the height of eighteen or twenty feet.—The first stone of this bridge was laid on October 30th, 1760; and it was completed about the latter end of the year 1768, at the expence of 152,840*l.* 3*s.* 10*d. The magnificent prospect from the top is so well described in the Tour through London† (a little book that no walker of taste should be without), that I must refer my reader to that judicious and pleasing compilation, to which I freely acknowledge my frequent obligation.

this bridge by Mr. Parkinson, whom fortune favored with it in the Leverian lottery. That gentleman built a place expressly for its reception, and disposed the rooms with so much judgment, as to give a most advantageous view of the innumerable curiosities. The spirit of the late worthy owner seems to have been transfused into the present. He spares no pains or expence to augment a collection, before equally elegant and instructive.*

FLEET-PRISON.

ON the east side of Fleet-market, stands the Fleet-prison, for debtors, founded at least as early as the first of Richard I. It was also the place of confinement for such as had incurred the displeasure of that arbitrary court, the Star Chamber. This prison became such a scene of cruelty; that, in the year 1729, a most benevolent set of gentlemen, prototypes of the GOOD HOWARD, formed themselves into a committee, to search into the horrors of the gloomy gaol—

Unpitied, and unheard, where misery moans,
Where sickness pines, where thirst and hunger burns,
And poor misfortune feels the lash of vice,
While in the land of liberty. The land
Whose every street and public meeting glow
With open freedom, little tyrants rag'd;
Snatch'd the lean morsel from the starving mouth;
Tore from cold wint'ry limbs the tatter'd weed;

 Or, as the lust of cruelty prevail'd,

 And crush'd out lives by secret barbarous ways.

THOMSON.

ALL these barbarities were realized. The House of Commons, the year preceding, had taken up the enquiries;* and found that Huggins, warden of the Fleet, and Bambridge, his deputy, and William Acton, turnkey, had exercised most shocking cruelties. Those monsters were tried for the murder of five unhappy men, who died under the most horrid treatment from them. Yet, notwithstanding the prosecution was recommended from the throne, and conducted by the ablest lawyers,—to the concern of all good men, these wretches escaped their merited punishment.†

IN walking along the street, in my youth, on the side next to this prison, I have often been tempted by the question, Sir, will you be pleased to walk in and be married? Along this most lawless space was hung up the frequent sign of a male and female hand conjoined, with, Marriages performed within, written beneath. A dirty fellow invited you in. The parson was seen walking before his shop; a squalid profligate figure, clad in a tattered plaid night-gown, with a fiery face, and ready to couple you for a dram of gin, or roll of tobacco. Our great chancellor, lord HARDWICKE, put these demons to flight, and saved thousands from the misery and disgrace which would be entailed by these extemporary thoughtless unions.

CITY WALLS. I SHALL now give a general view of the Walls, the antient defence of the city; and of the Town-ditch, a work of considerable labor. In my progress I shall point out whatsoever was remarkable in the adjacent suburbs, or the parts within the city which border on the walls. There never was any alteration made in the course of this first precinct; it was preserved through all succeeding ages, and in every reparation or additional strength which was thought necessary. Its direction was from the first irregular. The Romans, as was frequently the case, consulted the necessity of the ground.* It commenced at the Palatine-tower, ran in a straight line along the eminence of Ludgate-hill, and above Fleet-ditch, as far as Newgate; then suddenly was carried northerly to a spot a little beyond Aldersgate, and at that place ran strait in a northern direction almost to Crip- plegate; from whence it resumed a strait eastern course as far as Bishopsgate, in which a long remnant of the wall, still called London Wall, is to be seen. From Bishopsgate it assumes a gentle curvature pointed to the Tower, over the site of which it originally passed, and probably finished in a Castellum in this, as it did in the western extremity. Another wall guarded the river, and ran the whole length of the south side of the city, in the direction of the vast street called Thames-street. But all this I shall particularise in my walk round the antient walls.

I SHALL first mention another considerable addition to the strength of those fortifications. The Town-ditch was a stupendous work, begun in the reign of king John, in 1211, by the Londoners themselves, possibly as a protection against their own monarch; who, in resentment to them, had just removed the Exchequer to Northampton. It was two hundred feet broad, and extended, on the outside of the walls, from Tower-ditch, to Christ's Hospital. Notwithstanding the multitude of hands employed, it was not finished in less than two years. It was filled with water, as is evident from the quantity of good fish Stow informs us were taken in it.* The citizens for some centuries were at a great expence in cleansing and keeping it open: but after the last attempt, in 1595, the work was given over, it became stable land, and was soon covered with buildings. Part remained within our memory. At present the site is beautified with a circus, crescent, and square.

THE western wall terminated near the river with a fort, which I apprehend to have been the castle of Montfichet, soon to be mentioned.

NEAR it, in the course of the wall, stood the Tower on the City Wall, built at the expence of the city, in the reigns of Edward I. and II. in which those kings occasionally resided. It stood till the 17th of Henry VII. when it was pulled down.

BLACK FRIARS.

WITHIN the walls, opposite to Bridewell, stood the great house of Black Friars, or Dominicans; founded by the interest and exhortations of Robert Kilwarby, archbishop of Canterbury, about 1276; when Gregory Rocksley, and the barons of London, presented him with the ground. Edward I. and his queen Eleanor became great benefactors; by the assistance of whom, the archbishop built the monastery, and a large church richly ornamented. This obtained every immunity which any religious house had. Its precinct was very large; it had four gates, and contained numbers of shops, the inhabitants of which were subject only to the king, the superior of the house, and their own justices. It also became a sanctuary for debtors, and even malefactors; a privilege which it preserved even long after the suppression of religious houses.

To make way for this foundation, two lanes were pulled down, and a part of the city wall; which last was rebuilt immediately, by a charter granted by Edward I. for that purpose. The castle of Montfichet also fell a sacrifice to this house. It was built by Gilbert de Montfichet, a follower of the Conqueror; and, growing ruinous, by gift of the king the materials were used for building the church, on the site of this antient tower. The church became a fashionable place of interment of people of rank; and to be buried in the habit of the order, was thought to be a sure preservative against the attacks of the devil. Among other illustrious personages were Hubert de Burgh, earl of Kent, and his wife Margaret, sister to Alexander II. king of Scotland; the heart of queen Eleanor; lord Fanhope; that patron of learning John Tiptoft, earl of Worcester, beheaded in 1470; James Touchet, earl of Audley, beheaded in 1497; Sir Thomas Brandon, knight of the Garter; William Courtenay, earl of Devonshire; and much other great and noble dust.

CASTLE OF MONTFI-
CHET.

IN the same church were also held several parlements. The remarkable one of 1450, in the reign of Henry VI. was adjourned from Westminster to this place: here the weak monarch vainly endea-

" Yet her majestie rose up and dawned."* At this time the queen was sixty : surely, as Mr. WALPOLE observed, it was at that period as natural for her to be in love !—I must not forget, that in her passage from the bride's to lord Cobham's, she went through the house of Doctor Puddin, and was presented by the doctor with a fan. We often see her highness drawn with a feather-fan.—The Count de Tillier, ambassador of France, in the latter end of the reign of James I. resided here. During his residence in England, the dreadful accident, called the Fatal Vespers, happened near his house. A celebrated preacher of the order of the Jesuits, father Drury, delivered a sermon to a large audience of British subjects, in a spacious room up three pair of stairs. In the midst of the discourse the floor fell, and ninety-four persons, besides the preacher, perished. It is disgusting to reflect on the uncharitable bigotry of the times. The Protestants considered the accident as a judgment on the Catholics, for their idolatry : the Catholics attributed it to a plot of the Protestants, to bring destruction on their dissenting brethren.

weavers, have houses, and receive apprentices, who are instructed in several trades; the masters receiving the profit of their labors. After the boys have served their time with credit, they are payed ten pounds to begin the world with; and are entitled to the freedom of the city. They are dressed in blue, with a white hat. The procession of these, and the children of Christ's Hospital, on Easter Monday and Tuesday, to St. Bride's church, affords to the humane the most pleasing spectacle, as it excites the reflection of the multitudes thus rescued from want, profligacy, and perdition. The number of vagrants, and other indigent and miserable people, received into this house the last year, was seven hundred and sixteen; many of whom had physic, and other relief, as their necessities required, at the expence of the hospital.*

MUCH of the original building yet remains; such as a great part of one court with a front, several arches, octagon towers, and many of the walls; and the magnificent flight of antient stairs, which leads to the present court of justice, which is a handsome apartment. Contiguous to it is the room of punishment; but in our mild country, no other instrument is to be seen in it but a large whipping stocks. This is [!]said to have been the place in which the sentence of divorce was pronounced against the worthy princess, which had been concluded on in the opposite monastery.

HALL.
FINE PIC-TURE BY HOLBEIN.

THE hall opens into the court room. Over the chimney is the celebrated portrait of Edward VI. by Holbein, representing that monarch bestowing the charter of Bridewell on Sir George Barnes, the lord mayor: by him is William earl of Pembroke, a great favorite and distinguished character; and Thomas Goodrich, bishop of Ely, and lord chancellor of England: and in a corner is the head of the celebrated painter. There are doubts whether this picture was completed by Holbein; for his death, and that of the king, very soon followed the solemnity it records.

SIR William Withers, lord mayor of London, is painted on horseback. He was president in 1714, and bestowed on this hospital the iron gates and marble pavement.

SIR William Turner, in long hair, furred robe, and gold chain; the face very fine. This gentleman was lord mayor in 1669; a native of Kirk Letham, in Yorkshire, and a most liberal benefactor to his native place. He was painted by Mr. Beale, for Mr. Knollys, who presented it to the governors of Bridewell.

ANOTHER portrait, of Sir Robert Geoffry, with long wig, and furred robes, dated 1593. Two cines for the army and navy. It was finished in 1670; but I am not acquainted with the time of the first establishment of this useful institution: perhaps in that of James I. there being in the hall the portrait of that monarch, and a bust of his apothecary, Gideon Delaune.

I SHALL revert to a much more antient person of the same profession, and of this same city, Coursus de Gangeland, on whom Edward III. settled sixpence a day for his care and attendance while that monarch lay ill in Scotland. The grant was made from Westminster, October 10th, 1345.* By this it appears that the king was attended in his campaigns by the faculty, but the year of his illness is not mentioned.

TILL within these few years this house was possessed of a most curious antique mortar; on the body of the mortar several figures, such as two griffins as supporters to a tree; and two animals, perhaps antelopes, supporters to another. Two lions in the same character to a third tree; and two others supporting a castle triple towered. Round the rim are these words: Veni Creator Spiritus, mentes tuorum visita, imple superna gratia quæ tu creasti pectâ.

Salve mea Cristur. S. T. Wenni.

The figure of this curiosity is preserved in the

* Rymer's Fœd. v. 496.

Gentleman's magazine for the year 1789. The mortar was cracked : and its masters, wanting a proper taste for the study of antiquities, condemned it to be melted down as old iron.

KING'S PRINTING-
HOUSE.

WITHIN this district was the King's Printing-house ; in which bibles, common prayers, proclamations, and every thing respecting the public, were heretofore printed. Here, in the time of Charles I. was made that dreadful omission, in the seventh commandment, of, Thou shalt commit adultery ; for which archbishop Laud very properly laid a heavy fine on the Stationers company, to whom the printing of the sacred book is committed by patent. The SPECTATOR wittily remarks, that he fears that many young profligates, of both sexes, are possessed of this spurious edition, and observe the commandment according to that faulty reading.

LUDGATE.

THE first gate in this southern part of the walls was Ludgate, which stood on the middle of Ludgate-hill. This and the other city gates* are at present pulled down ; Temple-bar excepted. We Britons assert that this gate was built by king Lud, 'a right worthie prince,'† who lived 72 years

* Aldgate, Cripplegate, and Ludgate, were taken down in 1760. The materials of the former were sold for 177l. 10s.; those of Cripplegate for 91l., and of Ludgate for 148l. The purchaser to remove the rubbish. Ed.

before Christ. But the Saxons say (possibly) with some degree of truth, that it was erected during the wars of the barons with king John; who, in 1215, entered the city, destroyed the houses of the devoted Jews; and with their ruins repaired the walls, and built this gate. When it was taken down to be rebuilt, in 1586, a stone, with this inscription in Hebrew, was found lodged in the wall. "This is the ward of Rabbi Moses, the son of the "honorable Rabbi Isaac." Ludgate was within my memory a wretched prison for debtors: it became what was called a free prison in 1373, but soon lost that privilege. It was enlarged, and had the addition of a chapel, by Sir Stephen Forster, on a very romantic occasion. He had been confined there, and, begging at the grate, was accosted by a rich widow, who asked him what sum would purchase his liberty. She payed it down, took him into her service, and afterward married him. In the chapel was an inscription in honor of him and Agnes his wife, dated 1454, the year in which he enjoyed the honor of being lord mayor of the city. Old Greffier gives a view of the ancient gate in a good picture of his of the great fire of London in 1666, which is engraven by Mr. Birch.

THIS gate put an end to the rebellion of Sir Thomas Wyat. When he had, with some loss, led his forces along the Strand and Fleet-street, in hopes of being joined by the citizens, he found it shut against him, and strongly manned: seized with despondency, he retreated a little down the hill, and, flinging himself on a bench opposite to the inn called The Bell Savage, began to repent the rashness of his enterprize and lament his folly. He was summoned by a herald to submit; which he agreed to do, requesting that it might be to a gentleman; and accordingly yielded himself to Sir Maurice Berkeley, or Sir Clement Parton.*

BELL
SAVAGE.

THE Bell Savage continues an inn to this day: but the sign is disused. Stow says that it received its name from one Isabella Savage, who had given the house to the company of Cutlers. The painter gave it a very diverting origin, deriving it from a Bell and a Wild Man; so painted a bell, with a savage man standing by it. The SPECTATOR alone gives the real derivation; which is from La Belle Sauvage, a beautiful woman, described in an old French romance as being found in a wilderness in a savage state.†

OLD BAILEY. ON the outside of Ludgate, the street called the Old Bailey runs parallel with the walls as far as Newgate. In this street stood Sydney-house (at present occupied by a coach-maker) once the residence of the Sydnies, till they removed to Leicester-house.‡ The Sessions-house, in which criminals of the county of Middlesex, and the whole capital, are tried, is a very elegant building, erected within these few years. The entrance into the area is narrow, to prevent a sudden ingress of mob. Above it is the figure of Justice. Every precaution has been taken to keep the court airy, and to prevent the effect of the effluvia arising from that dreadful disorder the gaol-fever. The havoc it made in May 1750, was a melancholy admonition to those interested in every court of justice. At that time my respected kinsman Sir Samuel Pennant, lord mayor; baron Clarke; Sir Thomas Abney, judge of the common-pleas; the under sheriff, some of the counsel, several of the jury, and many other persons, died of this putrid distemper. These fatal accidents having often happened in this kingdom, it is the more surprising that the neglect of the salutary precautions should have continued till the time of this awakening call.—MR. HOWARD has given a view and plan of the great gaol of Newgate, as now rebuilt. Some of the defects of the old one are remedied: but this FRIEND TO MANKIND seems still to think it is not free from errors; and that, without great care, the prisoners are yet liable to the fatal fever, the result of one of those errors.*

By a sort of second sight, the Surgeons Theatre SUR was built near this court of conviction and Newgate, the concluding stage of the lives forfeited to the justice of their country, several years before the fatal tree was removed from Tyburn to its present site. It is a handsome building, ornamented with ionic pilasters; and with a double flight of steps to the first floor.* Beneath, is a door for the admission of the bodies of murderers, and other felons; who, noxious in their lives, make a sort of reparation to their fellow-creatures, by becoming useful after death.

NEWGATE; THE new prison, which retains the name of Newgate, from the gate which, till within these few years, formed a part of it, is immediately beyond the Sessions-house: a massy building, with an extensive front of rustic work, having all the appearance of strength and security. Yet, in the infamous riots of 1780, the felons confined even in the strongest holds were released; stones of two or three tons in weight, to which the doors of their cells were fastened, were raised by that resistless species of crow, well known to housebreakers by the name of the Pig's-foot. Such was the violence of the fire, that the great iron bars of the windows were eaten through; and the adjacent stones vitrified.

* This was taken down in the recent improvements, and the Theatre removed to Lincoln's Inn Fields, where a stately edifice is just completed for the use of the Society. Eo.

THE gate stood a little beyond this building: WHEN BUILT. and as a military way has been traced under it, no doubt there must have been one during the time the city was possessed by the Romans: although the place had been made up, and no vestiges of it left. The gate which supplied its place, is supposed by Stow to have been erected between the years 1108 and 1128, when Richard Beauvoeyes, bishop of London, by enlarging the precinct of St. Paul's, had obstructed the usual way under Ludgate, and made this new outlet necessary. Mr. Howel says, that the original name was Chamberlain-gate. It had been for ages a prison, even as long as the year 1218; and for persons of rank, long before the Tower was used for that purpose. Robert Baldock, chancellor to Edward III. was sent there; where, says Fabian, he ended his days miserably: * Sir Thomas Percie, lord Egremond, and other people of distinction, were committed to that prison in 1457. In 1412, this gate was rebuilt by the executors of the famous Sir Richard Whittington, out of the effects he had allotted for works of charity: his statue, with the cat, remained in a niche to its final demolition, on the rebuilding of the present prison. It was destroyed in the fire of 1666, and rebuilt in its late form. It had one great arch, and one postern for passengers: and on each side a half hexagon tower.

NEW COMPTER.

To the north of Newgate, immediately across the street (and, with the east end of St. Sepulchre's church, forming the entrance of Giltspur-street) is lately built a vast pile, of a proper strength and simplicity, intended to supply the place of one or both of the city prisons, called Compters.—This, and the edifices just mentioned, form all together a superb, but melancholy groupe of public buildings; and are a noble improvement of this spot; which, a few years ago, was much incumbered with a number of old houses, interrupting the free course of the air, the view, and the intercourse of passengers.

NEWGATE-
STREET.

IN Newgate-street, over the entrance into Bagnio-court, is a small sculpture in stone of William Evans, gigantic porter to Charles I. and his diminutive fellow-servant, Jeffry Hudson, dwarf to the same monarch. It was probably with his own consent that the latter was put into the pocket of the giant, and drawn out by him at a masque at court, to amaze and divert the spectators.* He had too much spirit to suffer such an insult, from even a Goliath: for little Jeffry afterward commanded, with much reputation, a troop of horse in inscription cut on it to inform the public of the elevated situation of the place.

CHURCH OF
ST. SEPUL-
CHRE.

THE church of St. Sepulchre, or the holy sepulchre, beforementioned, stands at a small distance from the site of the gate, on the north side of Snow-hill. It was dedicated to the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem: but whether the original church, which was of a great size, and long since demolished, was of the form of that in Judea, is unknown. It was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VI. or Edward IV. Popham, chancellor of Normandy, who is mentioned as having been buried in the church of the Chartreux, was a great benefactor to this church. The famous captain John Smith, who perhaps underwent more romantic adventures, and deeds of arms, than any man who ever existed, rested here, in 1631, from his turmoils. I refer to his history for his wondrous acts of chivalry; for the kindness he experienced among the Turks, from the beautiful lady Tragabysanda! the charitable lady Calamata! and the blessed Pokahontas! the great king of Virginia's daughter!!! *

ever, that the bell-man should deliver from the wall to the unhappy criminals, as they went by in the cart, a most pious and awful admonition. And also another, in the prison of Newgate, on the night before they suffered. I give them in the note, as they are affectingly good.*

FROM a little beyond Newgate, the walls take a north-eastern direction, as far as Aldersgate.

after many mercies shewn you, are now appointed to die to-morrow in the forenoon; give ear, and understand, that to-morrow morning, the greatest bell of St. Sepulchre's shall toll for you, in form and manner of a passing bell, as used to be tolled for those that are at the point of death: to the end that all godly people, hearing that bell, and knowing it is for your going to your deaths, may be stirred up heartily to pray to GOD to bestow his grace and mercy upon you, whilst you live. I beseech you, for JESUS CHRIST's sake, to keep this night in watching and prayer, to the salvation of your own souls, while there is yet time and place for mercy; as knowing to-morrow you must appear before the judgment-seat of your Creator, there to give an account of all things done in this life, and to suffer eternal torments for your sins committed against him, unless, upon your hearty and unfeigned repentance, you find mercy; through the merits, death, and passion of your only mediator and advocate JE-

In 1657 it was found to belong to Henry Pierrepont, marquis of Dorchester. I do not know the time when the family alienated the place. All good people, pray heartily unto God for these poor sinners, who are now going to their death, for whom this great bell doth toll.

You that are condemned to die, repent with lamentable tears: ask mercy of the Lord, for the salvation of your own souls, through the merits, death, and passion of JESUS CHRIST, who now sits at the right hand of God, to make intercession for as many of you as penitently return unto him.

the old palace near St. Paul's by the great fire. After which it was probably purchased by the See to supply the loss of the former. It could be inhabited only by one prelate, Bishop Henchman, who died there in 1675, and was buried at Fulham.* London-house has long since been sold, under the powers of an act of parlement: and the house in St. James's-square (the present town-house of the bishops of London) purchased for their use. The last tenant of London-house, was, I think, old Rawlinson, the nonjuring titular bishop of London, who rented it. He died about twenty years ago; and left his antiquities to the university of Oxford.

ALMOST opposite to London-house, is Thanet-house. It was first called Dorchester-house, having been the residence of the marquis of Dorchester:† in after times the town seat of the Tuftons, earls of Thanet: a magnificent old house, built about the time of Charles I. It was hired or purchased by the incendiary statesman, lord Shaftsbury, for the purpose of living in the city, to inflame the minds of the citizens; among whom he used to boast he could raise ten thousand brisk boys by the holding up of his finger. He attempted to get into the magistracy; but, being disappointed in his views, and terrified at the apprehension of the detection of a conspiracy he had entered into against his prince, fled, in 1683, into Holland, where he soon died of the gout, heightened by rage and frustrated ambition.* This house, after undergoing various fortunes, in 1750 was converted into a lying-in hospital; a most humane institution, supported by voluntary contributions, which doth great honor to its patrons.

WESTMORE-

NORTHUM-BERLAND-HOUSES.

IN this street was also the town-house of the Nevils, earls of Westmoreland; a magnificent pile, now frittered into various tenements, but still keeps its name, under that of Westmoreland-court. The other great northern family was lodged not far from hence, but within the walls, in a street now called Bull-and-Mouth-street; Henry Percy, first earl of Northumberland: but the business of those potent peers was chiefly in the camp; for they seldom visited London, except to brave the sovereign or the favorite. On the attainder of that great peer, Henry IV. gave it to his queen Joan, and it was called the Queen's wardrobe.

LAUDER-DALE-HOUSE.

LAUDERDALE-HOUSE stood on the east side of the northern end of the street. It was the town-seat of the duke of Lauderdale: but its site is now covered with the distillery belonging to Messrs. Bote and Walsh.

THE Bull-and-Mouth Inn, not far from the site of the gate, must not be passed by, on account of the wonderful perversion of the name. It originally signified the mouth of Boulogne Harbour; which grew into a popular sign after the costly capture of that place by Henry VIII.

BULL-AND-MOUTH INN.

IN Noble-street, near Aldersgate, was Shelley-house, built by Sir Thomas Shelley, in the first of Henry IV: Sir Nicholas Bacon rebuilt it, in the time of queen Elizabeth, when it was called Bacon-house.

SHELLEY-HOUSE.

THE Barbican, which I mentioned, at page 12, as originally a Roman Specula, or watch-tower, lay a little to the north of this street. It was an appendage to most fortified places. The Saxons gave them the title of Burgh-kenning. They were esteemed so important, that the custody was always committed to some man of rank. This was entrusted to the care of Robert Ufford, earl of Suffolk, by Edward III., by the name of Base-court; which descended, by the marriage of Cecilia, one of his daughters, to Sir John Willoughby, afterward lord Willoughby, of Parham. Here was of old a manor-house of the king's, called Base-court, or Barbican, destroyed in 1251; but it was restored, as appears above. In the reign of queen Mary, it was possessed by Catherine, widow of Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, in her own right baroness Willoughby, of Eresby; and then wife of Thomas Bertie, ancestor of the duke of Ancaster: this lady, in her zeal against popery, had dressed a dog in a rochet or surplice, used by bishops; and, in affront to bishop Gardiner, had named a dog after him.* This induced her and her husband to quit their house at the Barbican, and retire into foreign parts, till the danger was over. The mansion named Willoughby-house, was of a great size, and inhabited by her son, who was called Peregrine, because he happened to be born abroad during the flight of his parents.

BRIDGEWATER-HOUSE.

THE earls of Bridgewater had also a house in the Barbican, called after their title. It was burnt down in 1675, and lord Brackley, eldest son of the then earl, and a younger brother, with their tutor, unfortunately perished in the flames. The site is now called Bridgewater-square, or garden. It was in the last century, at the time Newcastle was besieged, celebrated for its orchards, productive of such quantities of fruits, says Mr. EVELYN, as never were produced before or after that time. Mr. EVELYN attributes this to the decrease of smoke, resulting from the scarcity of coal in the capital from that event. He inveighs with great indignation at the increase of that species of fuel; and at the introduction of so many manufactories, productive of smoke, which not only deformed our noblest buildings with the sooty tinge, but also, from the quantity of coal, brought on catarrhs, coughs, and consumptions, in a degree unknown in Paris, and other cities, who make use of wood only. His words are strong: "The city of London," says he, "resembles rather the face of mount Ætna, the court of Vulcan Stromboli, or the suburbs of Hell, than an assembly of rational creatures, and the imperial seat of our incomparable monarch."* The project of this good and able writer, of supplying London with wood fires, was certainly very humane: but, from the destruction of the woods even in his days, was as little feasible as it would be at present.

In Beech-lane, adjacent to the Barbican, are the remains of the house of prince Rupert. By the account† of it in the European Magazine of 1791, p. 328, it appears that Charles II. paid him a visit there, and that the ringers of Cripplegate had a guinea for complimenting the royal guest with a peal.

IN Golden-lane, near the Barbican, stood a row of low houses, of singular construction, which, according to the inscription beneath a small print in my possession, had been a nursery for the children of Henry the Eighth. It had been also a playhouse in part of the reign of queen Elizabeth and her successor.

ST. ALBAN'S
CHURCH.

ST. ALBAN'S church, in Wood-street, I mention on account of its antiquity, having been founded in the time of king Athelstan, or about 924. Stow relates, that Roman bricks were in his time to be seen mixed with the building.† Athelstan had also a house near, which gave name to Adel-street, or King Adel-street, as it is called in old writings.‡

HEAD OF JAMES IV.

IN this church, flung among Plebeian skulls, was the head of the unfortunate James IV. of Scotland. His body, for a long time, had remained embalmed at the monastery at Shene. After the Dissolution, it was cast among some rubbish, where some workmen wantonly cut off the head; which was taken by Young, glazier to queen Elizabeth, who was struck with its sweetness, arising from the embalming materials. He kept it for some time at his house in Wood-street;

but at last gave it to the sexton, to bury among other bones in the charnel-house.* Such is often the end of ambitious greatness.

FROM the Barbican, Redcross-street, one of REDCROSS-STREET. the antient streets, points down towards Cripple-gate. In it the mitred abbot of Ramsey had his town-house. It was afterward called Drury-house, from its having been in after-times the residence of Sir Drue Drury. In this, or an adjacent street, I am told that general Monk, afterward duke of Albemarle, had his house.

ON approaching Cripplegate, is the church of ST. GILES'S, CRIPPLE-GATE. St. Egidius, St. Giles. That name always imports something of beggary: accordingly, this gate received its name from the number of cripples and beggars, with which it was haunted formerly. St. Giles was their patron; he was a noble Athenian, and so charitable, as at length to give away the very coat he wore on his back, which he bestowed on a sick beggar; who no sooner put it on, than he was restored to health. The same legend relates also to St. Martin. He had in this very street a fraternity, founded by Henry V. who built here, for its use, a handsome house. In the church rest from their labours some of my brethren; such as John Speed, JOHN SPEED. the famous English historian and topographer;

ROBERT GLOVER. Robert Glover, Somerset herald, an indefatigable searcher after antiquities; and the zealous John

JOHN FOX. Fox, the famous martyrologist.

MILTON. HERE also lies the illustrious MILTON, who was buried under the clerk's desk,* on November 12th, 1674, from his house in Bunhill-fields: probably according to his desire, in order to be near his father, whom, about the year 1647, he had interred in this church.

IN the same church is a beautiful monument, by Bacon, of Mrs. Hand, wife to the present rector.

BARBER SURGEONS-HALL. NOT far from this church, within the walls, in Monkwell-street, or Mugwell-street, stands Barber Surgeons-hall; which is esteemed one of the best works of Inigo Jones: the upper end is formed out of one of the towers of London wall. The theatre, for the operations, is elliptical, and finely contrived. Since the separation of the company of the surgeons from that of the barbers, the building is in a manner deserted. Originally the chirurgic art, and that of shaving, went, in this city, hand in hand, as they do to this day in several parts of Europe. The barbers were first incorporated by Edward IV. in 1461; but, prior to that, they had been formed into a body by Thomas Morestead, surgeon to Henry IV. V. and

* Mr. Seward.

VI, who died in 1450: and the grant had been solicited by him, Jacques Fries, physician to Edward IV, and John Hobbes, his physician and surgeon: at length it was incorporated by that prince, and his brother Glocester, in the name of St. Cosme and Damianus; brethren, physicians, and martyrs. The company prospered for some time, till, finding that numbers had crept in among them, less skilled in the lancet than the razor, from the want of power to examine the skill of the chirurgical members, they obtained a new charter from Henry VIII. in which both professions were united. A fine picture by Holbein, preserved in this hall, commemorates the event.

PICTURE BY

Henry, in all his bluffness of majesty, is represented giving them their new charter: among them is Doctor Butts, immortalized by Shakespeare, in his play of Henry VIII. There are seventeen of the company represented. I refer to the Gentleman's Magazine, for April 1789, for their names. I may mention what the inquisitive author hath omitted; that John Chambre, physician to Henry VIII. was in orders, and was dean of the royal chapel and college, adjoining to Westminster-hall: and that Thomas Vycary was a citizen of London, and serjeant surgeon to Henry VIII.* and the three succeeding sovereigns. Aylif is another, who had been sheriff of London, and a merchant of Blackwell-hall. I relate part of his story from his epitaph :

In surgery brought up in youth,
 A knight here lieth dead ;
 A knight, and eke a surgeon, such
 As England seld hath bred.
 For which so soveraigne gift of God,
 Wherein he did excell ;
 King Henry VIII. call'd him to court,
 Who lov'd him dearly well.
 King Edward, for his service sake,
 Bade him rise up a knight ;
 A name of praise, and ever since He Sir John Ailife hight.*

By this charter, barbers were not to practise surgery, farther than drawing of teeth : and surgeons were strictly prohibited from the feat or craft of barbery, or shaving. Use was to make both perfect. But by the year 1745, it having been discovered, that the above arts were foreign to, and independent of each other, the barbers and the surgeons were, by act of parlement, separated, and made distinct corporations. It was very fit that an association, which was now become very ludicrous, should be dissolved : our surgeons began at that period to rise into great fame. True it is, that pupils then went to Paris to improve in the art : at present, Europe looks up to our surgeons as at the summit of the profession.

It will be curious to turn back from these times to those of Henry VIII. to compare the state of surgery: when at one time there were very few, as Gale tells us, worthy to be called surgeons. His account of those employed in the army is very humorous. "I remember," says he, "when I was in the wars at Muttrel (Montreuil) in the time of that most famous prince king Henry VIII. there was a great rabblement, that took on them to be surgeons: some were sowgelders, and some horse-gelders, with tin-bers, and coblers. This noble sect did such great cures, that they got themselves a perpetual name; for, like as Thessalus's sect were called Thessalions, so was this noble rabblement, for their notorious cures, called Dog-leaches; for in two dressings they did commonly make their cures whole and sound for ever; so that they neither felt heat nor cold, nor no manner of pain after. But when the duke of Norfolk, who was then general, understood how the people did die, and that of small wounds, he sent for me, and certain other surgeons, commanding us to make search how these men came to their death; whether it were by the grievousness of their wounds, or by the lack of knowledge of the surgeons; and we,

" according to our commandment, made search " through all the camp ; and found many of the " same good fellows, which took upon them the " names of surgeons ; not only the names, but " the wages also. We asking of them whether " they were surgeons or no, they said they were ;
 " we demanded with whom they were brought " up, and they, with shameless faces, would an" swer, either with one cunning man, or another,
 " which was dead. Then we demanded of them
 " what chirurgery stuff they had to cure men
 " withal ; and they would shew us a pot, or a " box, which they had in a budget ; wherein was " such trumpery as they did use to grease horses
 " heels withal, and laid upon scabbed horses
 " backs, with rewal, and such like. And others, " that were coblers and tinkers, they used shoe" maker's wax, with the rust of old pans, and " made therewithal a noble salve, as they did
 " term it. But in the end, this worthy rabble-" ment was committed to the Marshalsea, and " threatened, by the duke's grace, to be hanged for " their worthy deeds, except they would declare
 " the truth what they were, and of what occupa" tions ; and in the end they did confess, as I " have declared to you before."* I must not overlook another picture ; it is of Dr. Scarborough, afterward Sir Charles, physician to Charles II. James II. and king William. He was early appointed, by the College of Physicians, to read anatomical lectures at this hall. He is dressed in the red gown, hood, and cap, of a doctor in physic; and is in the attitude of speaking: one hand on his breast, the other a little stretched out. On the left is another figure, the demonstrating surgeon, dressed in the livery-gown of the city of London; whose business it was to handle and shew the parts of the dissected bodies. Accordingly, he holds up the arm of a dead body, placed on a table, partly covered with a sheet, with the sternum naked, and laid bare, and the pectoral muscles appearing. He read these lectures with great applause sixteen or seventeen years; and deservedly attained the character of the ablest physician of his time, of great abilities and extensive learning.* He died in 1693.  Since the whole stock may soon exhausted be,

 Bestow't not all in charity.

NEVILLE'S-
INN.

IN the same street (at the end of Silver-street) stood Neville's-inn, the house of John lord Neville, in the 48th of Edward III. Ralph Neville, earl of Westmoreland, died possessed of it in the 4th of Henry IV. as well as of the Erber on Dowgate-hill. In 1558, it was the property of lord Windsor, and called Windsor-place.

SION-COL-LEGE.

To the north-east of Barber Surgeons hall; near St. Alphage's church, opposite to the western wall, is Sion College, founded on the site of Elsing Hospital or priory,* by Thomas White, rector of St. Dunstan's in the west, in the reign of queen Elizabeth; who gave three thousand pounds for the purchase and building of the college. It is governed by a president, two deans, and four assistants, annually chosen: and all the clergy of London, and its suburbs, are fellows. They have under their care alms-houses for ten poor men, and as many women. John Sympson, rector of

* Newcourt's Repertorium, i. 347.

St. Olave's, who superintended the building,* added, at his own expence, for the use of the studious part of the London clergy, a library one hundred and twenty feet long; and amply filled with books. The original hospital was founded by William Elsing, mercer, in 1329 (on the site of a decayed nunnery) for the support of a hundred blind men. He afterward changed it into a priory, and became himself the first prior; who, with four canons regular, were to superintend the miserable objects.

NEAR the corner of the wall, to the north of Sion College, stood the chapel of St. James's in the Wall, belonging to an hermitage dependent on the abbey of Gerandon, in Leicestershire, as early as the year 1298. The abbot placed here two chaplains, Cistercian monks of their house, to pray for the souls of Aymer de Valence, earl of Pembroke, and Mary his wife. After the Dissolution, it was granted to William Lambe, one of the gentlemen of the chapel to Henry VIII. citizen and cloth-worker, who endowed and gave it to the cloth-workers of London. Here the company have four sermons preached to them annually, on which times, the master, wardens, and livery of the company, after the sermon, relieve with clothing and money twelve poor men, and as many women. This was but a small part of the charities of this good man, which extended over most parts of the city. Lamb's Conduit fields took their name from one of them. He founded in that tract, or on the part to which they did in his days extend, several conduits, distinguished by a lamb on the top of the buildings. These were of no small service before the bringing of the New River to supply the capital. This worthy benefactor died in 1577, was buried in St. Faith's church, and is commemorated by an epitaph filled with irresistible puns on his innocent name.

GRUB-STREET.

I PASS by Cripplegate, by the south ends of Whitecross-street, and Grub-street : the last celebrated for the (supposed) residence of authors of the less fortunate tribe, and the trite and illiberal jest of the more favored. In this same street dwelt John Fox, above-mentioned ; and the very remarkable Henry Welby, esq ; of Lincolnshire, who lived in his house, in this street, forty-four years, without ever being seen by any human being, excepting an old maid servant, who only was permitted to approach him in cases of great necessity. He was to the hour of his death possessed of a large estate ; but an attempt being made on his life, by his ungrateful younger brother, he took the frantic resolution, thus to seclude himself from the world. He passed his days in most exemplary charity. He died October 29th, 1636, and was buried in the church of St. Giles's, Cripplegate. His old maid servant died only six days before her master. It is therefore not improbable that Mr. Welby died for want of assistance, as in our days that oddity Mr. Elwes had nearly done, on the death of his old woman. Mr. Welby's management, in his strange retreat, is too long to relate: the curious reader will find the whole in the 369th page of the Phœnix Britannicus.

THE Fletchers, Bowyers, makers of Bowstrings, and of every thing relating to archery, inhabited, in old times, this street. It is the last street, in this part of the town, which was in being about the time of Aggas's map: all beyond (as far as Bishopsgate-street Without) were gardens, fields, or morass: the last the original state of this part of the present London. This tract was in the manor of Finsbury, or rather Fensbury; and, in the days of the historian Fitzstephen, was an arrant fen; of which he gives the following account, in his description of the pastimes of the citizens, in his time; in which is mentioned the awkward substitute of the skate. "And," says the historian, "when that vast lake, which waters
"the walls of the city towards the north, is hard "frozen, the youth in great numbers go to divert "themselves on the ice; some taking a small run,
"for an increment of velocity, place their feet at

FINSBURY, AND MOOR-
FIELDS.

“ a proper distance, and are carried sliding side“ ways a great way. Other will make a large “ cake of ice, and, seating one of their com“ panions upon it, they take hold of one's hands “ and draw him along, when it happens, that, “ moving swiftly on so slippery a plain, they all “ fall headlong: Others there are who are still “ more expert in these amusements on the ice;
“ they place certain bones, the leg-bones of ani“ mals, under the soles of their feet, by tying “ them round their ankles, and then, taking a “ pole shod with iron into their hands, they push “ themselves forward by striking it against the “ ice, and are carried on with a velocity equal “ to the flight of a bird, or a bolt discharged from “ a cross-bow.”*

THESE fields were, till of late years, the haunt of most motley amusements, and some of not the most innocent nature; among them was every allurements to low gaming, by little fraudulent tricks. It was likewise the great Gymnasium of our capital, the resort of wrestlers, boxers, runners, and foot-ball players, and the scene of every manly recreation. Here the mountebanks set up their stages, and dispensed infallible medicines, for every species of disease, to the gaping gulls who surrounded them. Here too, I lament to say, religion set up its stage itinerant, beneath the shade of the trees; and here the pious well-meaning Whitefield long preached so successfully, as to steal from a neighboring charlatan the greater part of his numerous admirers, in defiance of the eloquence of the doctor, and the witty sallies of his pried attendant. The faithful merry andrew told his master not to be discouraged: he would engage soon to dislodge this powerful adversary. He accordingly climbed a tree above the head of the zealous preacher, who, in the midst of an ecstatic attitude, received from the impious wretch the full effects of a most active drug, and was forced to quit his discourse with the utmost precipitation. But andrew found it difficult to escape with his life; for he was assailed on all sides by showers of stones from the justly enraged congregation; and long felt, in his battered bones, the consequence of his wit. Mr. Whitefield used often to relate the adventure with much humour: and I received the account from a gentleman who heard him describe his piteous mishap.

On the north part of these fields stood the DOG-HOUSE. Dogge-house, in which were kept the hounds for the amusement of the lord mayor. Here resided the Common Hunt, an officer, the second in rank among those who formed the Prætorian establishment: Master Sword-bearer alone took place of him: Master Common Hunt followed him, and was to wait for his lordship's commands, on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays.*

It was, in the time of Edward II. of so little value, that the whole was let at the rent of four marks a year. It could only be passed over on causeways, raised for the benefit of travellers. In 1414, Thomas Fauconer, mayor, opened the MOORGATE. postern in the wall, called Moorgate, to give the citizens a passage into the country. He also began to drain this watery tract. In 1512, Roger Atchley, mayor, made further progress in the work.† Successive attempts brought the ground into the state we see it at present.

THE manors of Holywell and Finsbury, were early granted to the prebend of Finsbury in the cathedral of St. Paul's. In 1315, the prebendary, Robert de Baldock, granted all his clame in the said manors‡ to Sir John Gisors, mayor, and to the commonalty of London, for which they were to pay to Baldock, and his successors, annually, the sum of xxs. The right afterwards reverted to the church; and the prebendary granted, within this century, to the city a lease for forty-one years, on which a few buildings were erected. It was then discovered that to build on so short a tenure would be imprudent. The prebendary and the city applied to parlement, and got the power enlarged to ninety-nine years. The prebendary for the time being and the city unite in granting the leases. On this, Finsbury-square arose within these two years: a square that does not give place in beauty, and not much in size, to the most boasted in the west end of the town. To the disgrace of the builders, two houses on the south fell down almost as soon as they were built: and the rest of that side is in a most perilous state. The city caused a survey to be made: and the demolition of that side now depends on the resolutions of the next common-council. Possibly the gibbeting of a builder (in effigy) in the middle of the area, may have a happy effect throughout the capital. The late prebendary got for himself and family above two thousand pounds a year for the remainder of the lease. It is said that the value of rent to the prebendary in possession, and to the city, is at this time not less than six thousand pounds a year.

BETWEEN Bishopsgate and Moorfields stood the hospital of St. Mary of Bethlem; founded by Simon Fitz-mary, sheriff of London, in 1247, for a prior, canons, brethren, and sisters, of a peculiar order; subject to the visitation of the bishop of Bethlem. They were to be dressed in a black habit, and distinguished by a star on their breast.* In 1403 most of the houses belonging to this hospital were alienated, and only the master left, who did not wear the habit of the order. It seems to have been instituted for the reception and cure of lunatics : and had dependent on it some inferior houses. Stow mentions one in St. Martin's in the Fields : but a certain king, disliking that persons under such unhappy circumstances should be so near the royal palace, caused them to be removed to Bethlem, without Bishopsgate. In 1523, Stephen Gennings, merchant-taylor, with great humanity left by will forty pounds towards the purchasing of this hospital for the reception of lunatics. The mayor and commonalty had taken some steps to execute his design : but in 1545 were prevented by the munificence of their monarch, who bestowed it on the city of London, when it was converted to the humane purpose of receiving persons laboring under this most dreadful of maladies. At first (the medical relief excepted) their expences were borne by their friends, or their parishes ; but this edifice being found too small, and growing ruinous, in 1675 the lord mayor and aldermen, removing the site to the present place, began the noble hospital we now see ; and, great as it is, finished it in the next year, at the expence of seventeen thousand pounds. The front and wings extend five hundred and forty feet; and make a magnificent appearance. It was built on the plan of the palace of the Tuilleries, at Paris. Louis XIV. was so incensed that his palace should be made the model for a lunatic hospital, that it was said, he ordered a plan of the palace of our monarch at St. James's to be taken, for offices of the vilest nature.*

THE humanity of the nation, in 1734, was the cause that two large wings were added for the reception of incurables, of which there were lately one hundred, in that terrible state, maintained within these walls. The whole number of distracted people, admitted in the last year, was two hundred and twenty-eight; cured and discharged, a hundred and eighty-nine; buried, fourteen; remained under cure, two hundred and eighty.†

OVER the gates are two capital figures, of raving and melancholy Madness, the work of Caius Gabriel Cibber, the father of the admirable comedian and wit Colley Cibber. Pope satirizes himself, when he makes these fine figures the mere vehicle of abuse on the son, by calling them

But Colley Cibber, after very long-suffering, took ample revenge, in a short but bitter Philippic against our great poet; which touched his pride so much as to contribute to bring him speedily to the grave.

ST. LUKE'S
HOSPITAL.

OPPOSITE to Bethlem Hospital, on the north side of Moorfields, stood the hospital of St. Luke, a long plain building, till of late appropriated to the same purposes, but totally independent of the former. It was founded on the humane consideration that Bethlem was incapable of receiving all the miserable objects which were offered. On the first of January 1787, the patients were removed from the old hospital, to a new one, erected under the same name, in Old-street, on the plan of the former, extending in front four hundred and ninety-three feet. Since the first admission of patients, on July 30th, 1751, to the same day 1791, four thousand four hundred and twenty-one have been admitted: of which nineteen hundred and thirty-six have been discharged cured: and fourteen hundred and sixty-five uncured. By a very liberal regulation, uncured patients may be taken in again, on the payment of five shillings* a week: so that their friends may, if they please, try a second time the force of medicine on their unhappy relations or connections. The old hospital is now pulled down, and replaced by a handsome row of houses.

* This is now increased to seven shillings. The number of patients received into the hospital from its opening to April 21, 1809, amounted to 9042, of whom 3884 have been discharged, uncured or as ideots, and 3915 as cured. Seven hundred have died during that period. Ed.

IMMEDIATELY behind this hospital is Peerless-pool, in name altered from that of Perillous-pond, so called, says old Stow, from the numbers of youths who had been drowned in it in swimming.* In our time it has, at great expence, been converted into the finest and most spacious bathing place now known; where persons may enjoy that manly and useful exercise with safety. Here is also an excellent covered bath, a large pond stocked with fish, a small library, a bowling-green, and every innocent and rational amusement: so that it is not without reason that the proprietor hath bestowed on it the present name.

PEERLESS-POOL.

THE parish of St. Luke's was taken out of that of St. Giles's Cripplegate, by an act in his late majesty's reign. I mention it merely to direct the reader's attention to the steeple of the new church, which terminates most singularly in a fluted obelisk.

ST. LUKE'S
CHURCH.

ON the west side of Moorfields is the Artillery Ground: a large piece of ground laid out for the purpose of proving the artillery; and for exercising the military belonging to the city. It was originally in Bishopsgate-street, where some land belonging to the priory of St. Mary Spittle was used with the same intention. William, last prior of this house, granted it, for three ninety-nine years, to the fraternity of artillery, or the gunners of the Tower, for the practice of great and small ordnance; and it was long called the Artillery Garden. This society was greatly patronised by Henry VIII: his daughter Elizabeth favored it in a high degree; as became a princess whose dominions were threatened with perpetual invasion by her potent rival. The earl of Warwick (Ambrose Dudley) was master of the ordnance; under him, but more particularly under William Thomas, master gunner of the queen's ship the Victory, in 1584, the art was thrown into a system. Thomas proposed to the council, that the charter granted to the Fraternity by Henry should be confirmed, and that the earl of Warwick should be governor; and that a certain number of able gunners should be appointed to instruct in the art, and that none should be appointed to any of her majesty's ships or forts, except those whom they should approve. This plan was rejected: and the ground remained to the gunners of the Tower.*

IN 1585 a new military society arose in the city; which, in these affrighted times, finding it-

* Strype's Stow, i. book ii. p. 96, 97.

self grievously harassed by continual musters and exercising of men, found a remedy in the gallant spirit of several of the citizens. A number (among whom were many skilful officers, who had served with credit abroad) formed themselves into a respectable body of volunteers, exercised themselves, and trained others to the art of war. Within two years there were nearly three hundred merchants, and others, capable of training and teaching soldiers the management of their pieces, pikes, and halbards; to march, counter-march, and ring. They made a considerable figure at the camp at Tilbury, in the celebrated year 1588. After that time, this useful discipline was neglected; but in 1610 it revived, and the volunteers became so numerous as to amount in time to six thousand men. The old place of exercise being too small for the purpose, they removed to the New Artillery Ground. In the year 1614, there was a general muster; and the citizens, bravely furnished, under twenty captains, made a most creditable appearance. In 1622 they began to build, on one side, an armoury, which is excellently supplied: Charles II. when prince, and his brother James duke of York, entered into this company: and on the Restoration the duke himself took the command, and called it his own company. The president, and other officers, consist of the leading persons in the city : and one of the royal family is captain-general. It consists of three hundred men.

BESIDES this military force, the city has six regiments of militia, commanded by gentlemen of the first rank in the city : these are under a lieutenancy peculiar to London ; and are exercised.

TRAINED-BANDS.

IT was this body, then known by the name of the Trained-bands, which decided the fate of the civil war of the last century. On every occasion they behaved with the spirit and perseverance of the most veteran troops. They were commanded by Skippon, captain of the Artillery Garden, who had served long in Holland ; and raised himself from a common soldier to the rank of captain, and proved himself an excellent officer. From the service he had been in, he came over full of prejudice against church and state, so was greatly in the confidence of his party.* He was totally illiterate ; but his speeches to his soldiers had more weight in their ears than the finest oratory. On marching to join the earl of Essex, this was his speech : “ Come, my boys, my brave boys, let us “ pray heartily, and fight heartily : I will run the “ same fortune and hazards with you. Remem- “ ber the cause is for God, and for the defence

* Clarendon, ii. 380.

“ of yourselves, your wives, and children. Come,
 “ my honest brave boys, pray heartily and fight
 “ heartily, and God will bless you.”*

At the back of Bethlem hospital is a long street, called London Wall, from its being bounded on the north by a long extent of the wall, in which are here and there a few traces of the Roman masonry.

LONDON
WALL.

A SHORT walk brought me to Bishopsgate-street Without. On the east side is Devonshire-square: the earls of Devonshire had a town-house near the street, which was called after their name. William, the second earl, died in it in 1628. It was originally built by Jasper Fisher, a clerk in Chancery, free of the goldsmiths company, and a justice of the peace. Stow calls it a large and beautiful house, with gardens of pleasure, bowling-allies, and the like. His vanity ruined him, and his house got the name of Fisher's Folly. It had a quick succession of owners. It belonged to Mr. Cornwallis; to Sir Roger Manners; and to Edward earl of Oxford, lord high chamberlain,† the same who is recorded to have presented to queen Elizabeth the first perfumed gloves ever brought into England. Her majesty lodged in this house in one of her visits to the city: probably when this gallant peer was owner. After him it fell to the Cavendishes; but that they resided in this neighborhood long before is to be supposed, as their ancestor, Thomas Cavendish, treasurer of the exchequer to Henry VIII. interred his wife in St. Botolph's, the parish church: and by will, dated April 13th, 1523, bequeathed a legacy towards its repairs.* About the time of the civil wars it became a conventicle. The author of Hudibras alludes to it in these lines, when, speaking of "the packed parliament" of those times, he says

That represents no part o' th' nation,
But Fisher's Folly congregation.†

Canto ii. line 893.

NEAR it was another fair house, built by one of our nobility, lord John Powlet;‡ I conjecture, an ancestor of the duke of Bolton. I imagine him to have been the second marquis of Winchester, before he came to his title.

ST. MARY
SPITTLE.

ON the east side of the north end of this street stood the priory and hospital of St. Mary Spittle; founded, in 1197, by Walter Brune, sheriff of London, and Rosia his wife, for canons regular of the order of St. Augustine. It was noted for its pulpit cross, at which a preacher was wont to preach a sermon consolidated out of five others, which had been preached at St. Paul's Cross, on Good Friday, and the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in Easter week; and then to give a sermon of his own. At all which sermons the mayor and aldermen were to attend, dressed on each occasion in different colored robes. This custom continued till the destruction of church government, in the civil wars of the last century. They have since been transferred to St. Bride's church, and preached on Easter Monday and Tuesday, that on the Monday by a bishop, that on the Tuesday by a dean. The lord mayor and lady mayoress, and the aldermen and their wives attend in state, preceded by the blue-coat boys. At the Dissolution, here were found not fewer than a hundred and fourscore beds, well furnished for the reception of the poor.*

To page 15 I refer the reader for an account of the antiquities found in these fields.

The great population of this part of the town, called Spittle-fields, was owing to the blessed persecutions of the Huguenots, in the reign of Louis le Grand; who sent thousands of his industrious subjects into our kingdom, to transfer to his bitterest enemies the arts and manufactures of his own. They flourished in this place to a great degree : at present they suffer a temporary depression from the giddiness of fashion, which, of late, preferred the vegetable material of cotton, to that produced from the antient silkworm.

IN April 1559, queen Elizabeth visited *St. Mary Spittle in great state ; possibly to hear a sermon given from the cross. She was attended by a thousand men in harness, with shirts of mail, and corslets, and morice pikes,† and ten great pieces carried through London, unto the court, with drums and trumpets sounding, and two morrice-dancings, and in a cart two white bears.

IN 1617, numbers of lords, and others of the king's most honorable privy council (his majesty being then in Scotland) heard a sermon preached here by the Reverend Doctor Page, of Deptford ; and afterward rode with the lord mayor, Sir John Leman, fishmonger, to his house near Billingsgate, where they were entertained with a most splendid dinner.‡ In honor of Sir John, and his brother fishmongers, Anthony Monday wrote his Chrysonaleia, or Golden Fishing.

skilled in the laws, and much trusted by Edward III. and who was sent by him, in 1343, to pope Clement VI., to remonstrate to his holiness against his clame of presenting to English livings, and filling them with foreigners, who never resided on their cures, and drained the kingdom of its wealth. This, it may be easily supposed, the pope took much amiss; insomuch that Sir John thought it best to make a speedy retreat.* It appears likewise that this knight was a very valiant man, and served the king with his sword, as well as his tongue.

LONG after, Shoreditch acquired much fame from another great man, Barlo, an inhabitant of this place, and a citizen; who acquired such honor as an archer, by his success in a shooting-match at Windsor, before Henry VIII. that the king named him on the spot Duke of Shoreditch. For a long series of years after this, the captain of the archers of London retained the title. On the 17th of September, 1583, the Duke (at the expence of the city) had a magnificent trial of skill: he sent a summons to all his officers, and chief nobility, with all their train of archery in and about London, to be ready to accompany him to Smithfield. In obedience, appeared the marquis of Barlo, and the marquis of Clerkenwell, with hunters who wound their horns; the marquises of Islington, Hogsden, Pankridge, and Shacklewell, who marched with all their train fantastically habited. Nearly a thousand had gold chains; and all were gorgeously attired. The sum of archers were three thousand; their guards, with bills, four thousand; besides pages and henchmen. And the duke sallied out to meet them from Merchant Taylors hall,* to exhibit such a sight that was never seen before, nor ever will again; unless a combination of the modern societies of archers should treat the capital with the revival of this antient and worthy pageantry.

* Holinshed, 365. Weever's Funeral Monuments, 427.

BISHOPS-GATE.

THE building of Bishopsgate, which divides the street, is attributed to Erkenwald, elected bishop of London in 675: the reparation of it, to William, prelate at the time of the Conquest. Henry III. confirmed to the Hans merchants certain privileges, for which they were bound to support this gate. Accordingly, in 1479, it was elegantly rebuilt by them. In memory of the founder, and the first repairer, there were two statues of bishops: and besides, two others, conjectured to have been designed for Alfred, and Aeldred earl of Mercia, to whose care that great prince had committed the gate.

Not far without the gate stands a house, called the White Hart, of most antient date, not less than 1480, which is still perpetuated in large figures in the front: but none of the original building appears to be left. I believe there are but very few houses in London remaining, older than the time of queen Elizabeth, or James I. The great fire almost entirely destroyed those in the city. In Holborn, Broad St. Giles's, and St. John's Lane, Clerkenwell, are some old houses: in Catherine Wheel Alley, in this street, is a very old house in a ruinous state: and there are some also about Temple-bar. It is no wonder that we have so few; till about the year 1200 there were very few stone houses, and none tiled or slated: they were built with wood, and thatched with straw or reeds. In the year 1189, Richard I. ordered that they should be built with stone to a certain height, and that they should be covered with slate or burnt tile. This order was repeated, but it was long before it was obeyed. This is not much to be wondered at; for, above a century afterward, such simplicity reigned, that one Peter Spileman made fine for his lands to Edward II. to find (among other things) litter for the king's bed, and hay for his horse.*

* Strype's Stow, i. book i. p. 250.

runs Houndsditch, now a long street, formerly a filthy ditch; which took its name from being the place into which dead dogs, and all manner of dirt were thrown. Into it, as worthy of no better sepulture, was thrown the noble Edric, the murderer of his master Edmund Ironside; after having been drawn by his heels from Baynard's-castle, and tormented to death by burning torches. Here it was customary for pious people to walk, on purpose to relieve the bed-ridden, who lay on a ground floor, covered with a neat cloth, and with a pair of beads, to shew to charitable passengers their helpless situation, and that they were incapable of doing more than pray for them.

DUKE'S PLACE.

PRIORY OF CHRIST-
CHURCH.

DUKE'S PLACE is of considerable extent; much inhabited by the Jews: it stands on the site of the priory of the Holy Trinity, or Christ-church; founded in 1108, by Matilda, wife to Henry I: the prior was always an alderman of London, and of Portoken ward; who, if he happened to be exceedingly pious, appointed a substitute to transact temporal matters. Norman was the first prior; and he and his successors rode, on solemn days, with the aldermen, but in their monastic habits. This is said to have been the richest priory in England; and possibly for that reason was selected to be the first which was dissolved.* Henry

* Fuller's Church History, book vi. 306.

VIII. granted it to Sir Thomas Audley, afterward lord chancellor of England; who inhabited the priory, and died there in 1554. By the marriage of his daughter and sole heiress Margaret, with Thomas duke of Norfolk, it was conveyed into the Howard family; and received the name of Duke's Place. In 1562, he rode through the city with his dutchess, to his residence here, attended by a hundred horse in his livery, with his gentlemen before him in coats guarded with velvet, preceded (officially as earl marshal) by the four heralds, Clarencieux, Somerset, Red Cross, and Blue Mantle. So respectable was the appearance of our antient nobility.

Two gateways, and some parts of the ruins of this priory, may be still traced, enveloped in more modern buildings: some of the south transept may be discovered in certain houses; from which it appears that the architecture was of the round arch, or Saxon style.*

IN Duke's Place the Jews Synagogue has been SYNAGOGUE. lately rebuilt, in a beautiful style of the simplest Grecian architecture, by Mr. Spiller, surveyor, and consecrated in a splendid and solemn manner.

A CURIOUS investigator of antiquities hath lately ST. MICHAEL'S CHAPEL. recovered the beautiful little chapel of St. Michael, near Aldgate, under the house of Mr. Relph, in.

* Mr. Carter has made drawings of these remains.

*Leadenhall-street. It is supposed to have been built by prior Norman, about the year 1108, and is in the gothic style of architecture. Its dimensions are forty-eight feet by sixteen; and it is built with square pieces of chalk. The arches are very elegant, supported by ribs, which converge, and meet on the capitals of the pillars; which are now nearly buried in the earth; but are supposed to be covered with sixteen feet of soil. The whole addition of soil, since its foundation, probably amounts to twenty-six feet; an amazing increase, which might almost occasion one to suspect it to have been the sub-chapel of some now-lost church.

ST. JAMES'S,
DUKE'S
PLACE.

THE church of St. James, Duke's Place, rose out of the ruins of this priory, in the time of James I. and the mayoralty of Sir Edward Berkham.

ALDGATE.

EALDGATE, or Aldgate, which signifies Old Gate, stood in the place where the wall formed an angle, and took a southerly direction, which terminated in a postern near Tower-hill. It was one of the four principal gates; the Roman road passed under it, so a gate must have existed on the site in the earliest times. It was also one of the seven that had double doors, as was evident by the hinges, which existed in the time of Stow. Mention is made of it in the reign of Edgar, by the name of Ealdgate. In the fierce wars between king John and his barons, the latter entered the city through this gate, and committed great ravages among the houses of the religious. Their chieftains repaired, or rather rebuilt Aldgate, after the Norman manner; and made use of stone brought from Caen, and a small brick called the Flanders tile, which probably has been often mistaken for Roman. This gate was of great strength, and had a deep well within.

* Gentleman's Magazine, April 1789, 293, tab. i.

IN 1471, the Bastard Falconbridge, at the head of five thousand riotous people, attacked the city on this side, won the gate, and forced in a few of the forces which defended it; but, the portcullis being let down, the assailants were all slain. The valiant alderman of the ward, and the recorder, then ordered it to be drawn up, and sallying forth, defeated the Bastard with great slaughter. In 1606, this gate was taken down, and rebuilt under the care of Martin Bond, aforementioned: as a proof of its antiquity, I may mention that many Roman coins were found among the foundations.

IMMEDIATELY without the gate, is the church of St. Botolph, Aldgate. It is one of four dedicated, in London, to this favorite saint. In it is the vault of the Darcies, of the north; and the tomb of Thomas lord Darcie, knight of the Garter; with his figure on it, representing him asleep, with a shroud wrapped round him; his face, breast, and arms naked. The figure is at present deformed by fresh painting, and the inscription rendered illegible. This nobleman, disliking the innovations in religious matters, took a secret part in the insurrection called the Pilgrimage of Grace: and, in conjunction with the archbishop of York, was supposed to have given up to Aske, chief of the malecontents, the castle of Pontefract, on very frivolous pretences. He lost his head on Tower-hill, in 1537, and was interred in this church. He had been in high favor with the king; was entrusted by him, in 1510, with fifteen hundred archers, and four great ships, to assist Ferdinand against the Moors of Africa; but that monarch, having brought his designs to succeed to his wish, dismissed lord Darcie and his forces with rich rewards.*

SIR NICHOLAS CAREW.

HERE also was buried another victim to the unrelenting Henry, Sir Nicholas Carew, his master of the horse, and knight of the Garter. This gentleman was charged with nothing more than for being of council with Henry Courtney, marquis of Exeter, in the imaginary plot for deposing his master, and making cardinal Pole king in his stead: for this, on March 3d, 1538, he suffered on Tower-hill. By the instructions of his keeper, he imbibed the principles of the reformers, and died professing their religion.

* Lord Herbert's Life of Henry VIII. p. 15.

IN the cœmety of this church stood formerly the very remarkable tomb (in the altar form) of Coya Shawsware, a merchant, and secretary to Nogdi-beg, the Persian ambassador. Around the margin was an inscription in the Persian tongue. Shawsware died here in 1626, aged 44. The ambassador, the son of the deceased, and numbers of Persians attended, and performed the funeral rites, according to the forms of their religion: his son was the principal in the ceremony, who sat cross-legged at the north end of the grave, sometimes reading, sometimes singing, and with all the expressions of the truest filial affection. During a month after, the friends of the deceased visited the grave morning and evening, and made their orisons on the spot, till they were driven away by the rudeness of the English mob.

PERSIAN TOMB.

IN the end of the reign of James I. strong efforts were made to establish a trade with Persia. The great emperor Abbas sent this ambassador to our court. The famous traveller Sir Robert Shirley, and Sir Dodmore Cotton, discharged the same office on our part, and both died at Casbin, in the year 1628. Nogdi-beg, the Persian ambassador, poisoned himself at Swalley on his return home, dreading the resentment of his master for his treacherous misrepresentation of our illustrious Shir-

HOUSE OF JOHN STOW.

NEAR Aldgate lived and died the able historian John Stow. He relates a cruel execution on a gibbet, erected on the pavement before his house, on the bailiff of Rumford, in the time of Edward VI. In that age there were most barbarous and tyrannous punishments, by martial law, against all spreaders of rumors. The times were turbulent, but slighter penalties than death might have sufficed. The unhappy man, on the ladder, declared, in the presence of our historian, "That he knew
" not for what offence he was brought to die, except for words by me spoken yesternight to Sir
" Stephen, curate and preacher of this parish;
" which were these: He asked me, What news
" in the countrey? I answered, Heavey newes.
" Why, quoth he? It is sayd, quoth I, that many " men bee up in Essex; but, thanks be to God,
" all is in good quiet about us. And this was all,
" as God be my judge." Upon these words of the prisoner, Sir Stephen, to 'avoid the reproach
' of the people, left the citie, and never was heard

' of since among them to my knowledge.'—I shall have farther occasion to speak of Sir Stephen, who was a fanatical firebrand of those days.

ON the outside of the gate, begin the long street and suburb of Whitechapel. The church stands very distant from the entrance into the street. It was originally a chapel of ease to Stepney, and known, as early as the year 1336, by the name of the church of St. Mary Matfelon; which is said to signify in the Hebrew, Mary lately delivered of her holy child: as the township was styled Villa Beatae Mariæ de Matfelon.* It is now a very rich rectory, in the gift of Brazen-nose College, Oxford.

WHITECHAPEL.

IN the end of the reign of queen Anne, this church was prophaned by a most libellous and scandalous picture of the Last Supper, placed above the altar, by the then rector. It seems that Doctor White Kennet, at that time dean of Peterborough, had given such offence to the high-church rector, by his writings in defence of the Hanoverian succession, that he caused the dean to be painted among the apostles in the character of Judas, dressed in a black habit, between cloak and gown; a short wig; and, to render it impossible to mistake the object of the satire, with a black velvet patch on his forehead, which the dean always wore from the time he received a dreadful injury on that part in his younger days. Beneath was written, Judas the Traytor. The dean, with true greatness of mind, despised the insolence: but the bishop of London interfered, and caused the picture* to be removed by the very persons who had set it up.

IN this parish some of our nobility had formerly their villas, for the sake of country air. Here Cromwel earl of Essex, the short-lived minister of Henry VIII. had a house; and the famous Gondamor retired here, when disengaged from his bubble, James I.

MINORIES. PARALLEL to the walls, between Aldgate and the Tower, is the street called the Minories; named from certain poor ladies of the order of St. Clare, or minoresses, who had been invited into England by Blanch queen of Navarre, wife to Edmund earl of Lancaster; who, in 1293, founded here, for their reception, a convent. On its suppression it was converted into a dwelling-house, and granted by the king to several great people, who inhabited it. The bishops of Bath and Wells once had it, in lieu of their mansion in the Strand: and in 1552, Henry Grey, duke of Suffolk, possessed it by patent from Edward VI. On his attainder it reverted to the crown, in which it continued till the Restoration. Soon after, a new house was built on it, called the King's, for what reason is unknown. Charles granted it to Colonel William Legge, who resided there, died in it in 1672, and was buried from thence, with great funeral pomp, in the adjoining church, that of Trinity Minories: and his descendants, of the Dartmouth family, still continue to make it the place of their interment.

TRINITY
CHURCH.

THIS street, from being as despicable as any in the city, has of late years been most excellently rebuilt; is filled with several spacious shops; is become very handsome; and, one side, has its Square, its Circus, and its Crescent.

NOW A FINE
STREET.

BEHIND this street is Goodman's Fields, or rather Square. Stow, in his simple manner, tells, that in his time one Trolop, and afterward Goodman, were the farmers there; and that the "fields
" were a farme belonging to the said nunrie; at " the which farme I myselfe (says he) in my " youth, have fetcht manye a halfe penny worth where Garrick first shewed those powers, which, for such a number of years, astonished and charmed the public: his first appearance was on October 19th, 1741. One Odel founded the playhouse in this square, in 1728. As Sir John Hawkins expresses it, a halo of brothels* soon incircled that, as it does all theatres; and drove away the industrious inhabitants. This theatre was rebuilt, in an expensive manner, by Henry Giffard, in 1737; but was suppressed by the excellent act for the licensing of places of dramatical entertainment. Yet it was supported a few years by an evasion, during which time, Mr. Garrick entered himself of the company. He drew an audience of nobility and gentry, whose carriages filled the whole space from Temple-bar to Whitechapel.†

CROSSED
FRIARS;

ON the west side of this portion of the walls, stood the house of the Crutched or Crossed Friars, or Fratres sanctæ Crucis. The order was instituted, or at least reformed, about the year 1169, by Gerard, prior of St. Mary de Morello, at Bologna. They astonished the English by appearing among them, in 1244, and requiring from the opulent, a house to live in, telling them they were privileged by the pope to be exempt from being reproached by any body; and that they had from him power to excommunicate those who were hardy enough to reprove them. Two citizens, Ralph Hosier, and William Sabernes, were wise enough to accommodate them with a house in this place, and became friars in it. Originally they carried in their hands an iron cross, which they afterward changed into one of silver. They wore a cross, made of red cloth, on their garment; which at first was grey, and in later times altered to blue. One Adams was the first prior: Edmund Streat-ham, the last. Their annual income was only 52*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Henry VIII. granted their house to Sir Thomas Wyat, the elder, who built a handsome mansion on part of the site. This was the gentleman whom *Anthony Wood (not without justice) calls the delight of the muses, and of mankind. He had the honor to be in great intimacy with the congenial peer, Henry earl of Surry. They were the refiners of our poetry: the elegant effusions of their muses are united in a little book published in 1585, intitled, "Songes and Sonnets, by the right honorable Henry Howard, late earl of Surry, and others." Sir Thomas died in 1541, of a violent fever, in Dorsetshire, contracted by hard riding to conduct to court the emperor's ambassador, who had landed at Falmouth. He was highly celebrated by his noble friend, and by every person of genius in the age in which he lived.

LUMLEY-
HOUSE.

THIS house afterwards became the residence of John lord Lumley, a celebrated warrior in the time of Henry VIII.; who distinguished himself greatly at the battle of Flodden, by his valour, and the number of men he brought into the field. Notwithstanding this, his zeal for the old religion engaged him in the Pilgrimage of Grace; from which he with much dexterity extricated himself and followers. But his only son soon after lost his head, for his concern in a fresh insurrection. John lord Lumley, grandson of the first, was among the few nobility of that time who had a taste for literature. He had the honor and good fortune to marry his sister Barbara to my illustrious countryman Humphrey Llwyd, of Denbigh,* and by his assistance formed a considerable library, which at present makes a most valuable part of that in the British Museum.

THE NAVY-
OFFICE.

IN the place of this house rose the Navy Office, a building of no beauty; in which the comptroller of the navy used to reside, and all business respecting the payment of seamen's wages, and many other naval matters, were transacted: but this office is now removed to Somerset-house. In the place of the Old Navy Office, the India company have erected a most magnificent warehouse, a regular oblong edifice of about two hundred and fifty feet, by a hundred and sixty ; inclosing a court of a hundred and fifty, by sixty, entered by an arched gateway. This is the great repository of the teas. I am told that the searchers, who have frequent occasion to thrust their arms deep into the chests, often feel numbnesses and paralytic affections.

THE friars hall was converted into a glass-house, for making drinking-glasses ; which, with forty thousand billets of wood, was destroyed by fire, in 1575.* The manufacture was set up in 1557, and was the first of the kind known in England. I may add here, that the finest flint glass was first made at the Savoy ; and the first plates for looking-glasses, and coach-windows, in 1673, at Lambeth, under the patronage of George Villiers, duke of Buckingham.

A GLASS-
HOUSE.

I FIND among the list of persons interred in the church belonging to these friars, the name of Sir Rhys ap Gryffydd, who lost his head on Tower-hill, in 1531. His servant, John Hughes, was hanged at Tyburn the same afternoon.† Sir Rhys was of the most illustrious house in South Wales. He was grandson to Sir Rhys ap Thomas, the great friend and supporter of the duke of Richmond, afterward Henry VII. by whom Sir Rhys was created knight of the Garter. His son, Sir Gryffydd ap Rhys, was father to the unfortunate Sir Rhys ap Gryffydd of Newtown, in Caermar- thenshire. The princely estate of the family (on which were fifteen castles) was forfeited, and a bare maintenance given to his son. Some part was restored by queen Mary, and some more by queen Elizabeth. Sir Rhys had married Katharine, the daughter of Thomas Howard, second duke of Norfolk, who died on May 21st, 1524. She was afterward married to Henry Daubeney, earl of Bridgewater, and became involved in great trouble on suspicion of some concern she had in the intrigues of queen Katharine Howard. She was buried at Lambeth, on May 11th, 1554. Sir Rhys had by her Gryffydd ap Rhys; whose son Walter was living in 1599. Sir Rhys was brother-in-law to Thomas, third earl of Norfolk, condemned in the end of the reign of Henry VIII. and (matrimonial) uncle to the accomplished Surrey. The real crime of Sir Rhys seems to have been his alliance with the unfortunate Howards. The ostensible cause, the same as that of his amiable nephew. The earl was charged with quartering the arms of England: Sir Rhys with using those of the princes of South Wales: for which both of them suffered death. How his servant was involved in his misfortunes I cannot learn. From Sir Rhys is descended the present Mr. Rice of Newtown, to whom will descend the title of baron of Dinecawr (one of his family castles) on the demise of his mother Cecil, daughter of the late earl Talbot, who had been created baron of Dinevor by his majesty in 1780, with remainder to his female issue.

NEAR this place stood another Northumberland-house, formerly the town residence of the illustrious family of Percy, particularly of that famous earl who sent a challenge to our king Henry IV. extant in the British Museum, and who was the father of the gallant Henry, surnamed Hotspur. It was afterward inhabited in the reign of Henry VI. by two of the earls of Northumberland: one of whom lost his life in the battle of St. Albans; the other, his son, in that of Towton. Being deserted by the Percies, the gardens were converted into bowling-allies, and other parts, says Stow, into dicing-houses. This, I imagine, was the first of those pernicious places of resort, for he calls it "their antient and only patron of "misrule."

HOUSE.

IN digging for the foundation of an additional wing to the East India Company's warehouses in Fenchurch-street, at a considerable depth, have been discovered some vestiges of the antient Northumberland-house.

IN Mark-lane, near this place, stood the magnificent house* built by Sir William Sharrington, a chief officer of the mint, in the reign of Edward

He was the instrument of the ambition of Thomas Seymour, lord admiral: he fell with his master, was condemned and attainted: and Shar- rington-house bestowed on Henry Fitz-alan, earl of Arundel, being thought a fit habitation for that great peer, on account of its size and splendor. Let me add, that Sir William was pardoned, emerged from his misfortunes, and soon raised another considerable estate, under the favor of Seymour's rival, Dudley duke of Northumberland;* possibly at the price of the admiral's blood, against whom he was the principal witness. Mr. WALPOLE has a drawing of Sir William, after Holbein.†

LOWS BARK-ING.

AT the bottom of this lane, in Tower-street, stands the church of All Hallows Barking. Legend says, that Edward I. when prince of Wales, was admonished, by a vision, to erect an image here to the glorious virgin; and, in case he visited it five times in the year, he was to be victorious over all nations, and in particular over Scotland and Wales. The image grew into great repute, and vast were the pilgrimages to it, till the suppression. An indulgence of forty days was granted to every one who performed this act of devotion.‡

IN this church were deposited, for a time, the bodies of that accomplished nobleman Henry Howard,* earl of Surrey, and of two prelates, who ended their days by the ax on Tower-hill. The ashes of the ill-fated Surrey were, in 1614, removed to Framlingham, in Suffolk. The pious Fisher (whose head was placed on a pole on the bridge) and the indiscreet Laud; the first was removed to the chapel in the Tower, to rest by the side of his friend Sir Thomas More;† the remains of Laud, beheaded in 1644, lay here till 1663, when they were removed to St. John's College, Oxford, over which he had presided.‡

IN this parish was designed a hospital for poor priests, and for lunatics of both sexes, as early as the time of Edward III; but not taking effect, it was granted to the hospital of St. Katherine; which was to find a chaplain to pray for the soul of Robert Denton, who had piously intended the first foundation.§

IN Seething-lane, or, as it was called antiently, Sydon-lane, which runs into Tower-street, stood a large house built by Sir John Allen, lord mayor, and privy counsellor to Henry VIII. It was afterward Sir Francis Walsingham's, and after that became the property of Robert Devereux, second earl of Essex.

POSTERN
GATE.

THE TOWER
OF LONDON.

FROM Aldgate the walls ran southward to the Thames, and ended, as is generally supposed, with a fort; on the site of which arose the present TOWER of London. To the north of it was a postern, for the benefit of foot passengers: it was originally a fair and strong gate, built of stone brought out of Kent, and Caen in Normandy. It stood till the year 1440, when it fell down; not, as is conjectured, from the pulling down of three hundred feet of the adjacent wall in 1189, for the purpose of enlarging and strengthening the Tower, but from decay; it being made at the same time with that fortress, which was built by the Conqueror in his first year, and strongly garrisoned with Normans, to secure the allegiance of his new and reluctant subjects.

THE first work seems to have been suddenly flung up in 1066, on his taking possession of the capital: this included in it a part of the antient wall; for, soon after the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, a dispute arose whether he was poisoned in the liberties of the city, or in the county of Middlesex: on examination, part of the antient wall was discovered; and his apartment found to be to the west of it, and in consequence the criminals were tried within the jurisdiction of the city. Had it been on the other side, it would have been adjudged to have been within the county. An additional proof of this fortress having been built upon the remains of another more antient, occurred in 1720, when in digging on the south side of what is called Cæsar's chapel, were discovered some old foundations of stone, three yards broad, so strongly cemented that it was with the utmost difficulty they were forced up.

THE great square tower called the White Tower, and by the Welsh, Twr Gwyn, or Twry Bryn-gwyn, was erected in the year 1078, when it arose under the directions of the great military architect Gundulph, bishop of Rockester;* who gave this noble specimen of innovation in the art of castle-building, and which was pursued by him in the execution of Rockester-castle, on the banks of the Medway. The walls are eleven feet thick; which have a winding stair continued along two of the sides, like that in the castle of Dover. Stow tells us, from Edmund de Haddenham, that during the time Gundulph was employed in this work, he was lodged in the house of one Edmere, a citizen of London.† This building was long dignified with the name of Cæsar's tower; but that illustrious invader probably never saw London: originally it stood by itself. Fitzstephen gives it the name of Arr Palatina, the Palatine tower; and says, with his usual romance, that the mortar of the foundation was tempered with the blood of beasts. commander had the title of Palatine bestowed on him, being, as was the case with several of the great men of that time, who had places of importance intrusted to their care, endowed with regal powers; such, for example, as the earl palatine, Hugh Lupus, had in the county palatinate of Chester.*

ST. JOHN'S
CHAPEL.

WITHIN this tower is a very antient chapel, dedicated to St. John, for the use of such of our kings and queens as wished to pay their devotion here, ever since the time of William the Conqueror. It is of an oblong form, rounded at the east end: on each side are five thick short round pillars, with vast squared capitals cut in different forms on their sides, with a cross on each: the arches are round, and all suit the architecture of its date. At the east end are two pillars of the same form as the others. Above is a gallery, with windows with round arches, looking into the chapel. This gallery is said to have been allotted for the females. The columns pass down quite to the ground floor, through a lower apartment, which is now a magazine of gun-powder.† The chapel forms part of the record office, and is filled with papers. That patron of the arts Henry III. gave directions about the ornamenting of this chapel. Among JOHAN. Evangeliste, &c.*

ADJACENT to this room is another very large one, also filled with papers. This is called the Council Chamber; in which many, of the first moment, have been held. Let me instance that which Richard III. held when duke of Glocester, when he ordered the murder of the noble Hastings, and meditated the death of Stanley, and others of the nobility.

COUNCIL
CHAMBER.

IN 1092 a violent tempest did great injury to the Tower; but it was repaired by William Rufus, and his successor. The first added another castellated building on the south side, between it and the Thames, which was afterward called St. Thomas's Tower. Beneath that was Traitors-gate, through which state prisoners were brought from the river: and under another, properly enough called The Bloody; for, till these happier ages, there was little difference between confinement, and the scaffold, or private assassination.

during nearly five hundred years, and only ceased to be so on the accession of queen Elizabeth.

HENRY VIII. on the death of his father, immediately retired to the Tower for some time for the sake of privacy, and to have leisure to form an administration, and here he continued several months.* He was attended by his yeomen of the guard. Fifteen of these were left in the Tower, and their name changed to that of Warders. These seem not to have been allowed the same distinction of dress as those who attend the royal person, till the following reign. When the protector, duke of Somerset, was confined there for the first time, he observed the diligent attendance of the warders; and promised them, that, when he was set at liberty, he would procure them the favor "to wear the king's clothe as the yeomen of the garde did. Somerset obtained his release, and caused the warders of the Tower "to be sworn extraordinary of the garde, and "to wear the same livery they do; which had "the beginning by this meanes."† makes him relate to the lieutenant? Here (in the upper floor of the Bloody Tower) the sweet innocents Edward V. and his brother, duke of York, perished, victims to the ambition of their remorseless uncle. And the empoisoning of Sir Thomas Overbury makes up the sum of the known murders, the reproaches of our antient fortress. Here was a strait room or dungeon, called the Little Ease, from the misery the unhappy occupier of so very confined a place endures. But this will appear a luxurious habitation, when compared with the inventions of the age of Louis XI. of France; with his iron cages, in which persons of rank lay for whole years; or his Oubliettes, dungeons made in form of reversed cones, concealed with trap-doors, down which dropped the unhappy victims of the tyrant, brought there by Tristan l'Hermite, his companion and executioner in ordinary. Sometimes their sides were plain, sometimes set with knives, or sharp-edged wheels; but in either case, they were true Oubliettes: the devoted were certain to fall into the land where all things were forgotten.

The tradition is, that Henry VI. was murdered in the Wakefield Tower, in a fine octagonal room, at present filled with papers belonging to the Record Office, containing all the records from the Conquest to the year 1483. The rest, to the present time, are kept in the Rolls chapel. This Tower took its name from having been the place in which the prisoners, taken at the battle of Wakefield, were confined.

WAKEFIELD
TOWER.

BEAUCHAMP TOWER.

THE Tower was first inclosed by William Longchamp, bishop of Ely, and chancellor of England, in the reign of Richard I. This haughty prelate having a quarrel with John, third brother to Richard, under pretence of guarding against his designs, surrounded the whole with walls embattled, and made on the outside a vast ditch, into which, in after times, the water from the Thames was introduced. Different princes added other works. The present contents, within the walls, are twelve acres and five rods; the circuit, on the outside of the ditch, one thousand and fifty-two feet. It was again inclosed with a mud-wall by Henry III.: this was placed at a distance from the ditch, and occasioned the taking down a part of the city wall; which was resented by the citizens; who, pulling down this precinct of mud, were punished by the king with a fine of a thousand marks.

BEAUCHAMP
TOWER.

THE Beauchamp Tower is noted for the illustrious personages who have been confined within its walls. Among them is the ill-fated Anna Bullen. It was from hence she wrote her celebrated letter to her pitiless tyrant, dated from her *doleful prison in the Tower. It is a composition that gives place to none in the true pathetic. From hence she was led to the block, placed on the green before this Tower, and received the fatal stroke with patience and resignation, on the 19th of May 1536.

AN innocent usurper succeeded to her apartments in 1553. Here the amiable, the learned, the good Jane Gray was confined (for the faults of an ambitious father-in-law) and remained a prisoner five months. She seems to have been pitied even by Mary. She probably would not have suffered, but for the imprudent insurrection of her weak father, the duke of Suffolk. She was the most accomplished lady of her time; was mistress of the Greek and Latin tongues; versed in Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabic, French, and Italian; was skilled in music; and the toilets worked with her own hand, preserved at Zurich with great reverence, prove the excellence of her needle-work. Her letters to Bullinger, most exquisitely written, I have seen in the library in that city. She fell, at the age of seventeen, on the same spot as Anna Bullen did, on January the 12th, 1553-4, and with most invincible fortitude: as she was conducted to the block (whether by accident or whether by design) she met the headless body of her beloved husband, beheaded just before on Tower-hill. A line in Greek, to the following purport, was her consolation: "That if his lifeless body should give testimony against her before men, his most blessed spirit should give an eternal witness of her innocence in the presence of God!"

A LITTLE farther on I shall give an account of another illustrious prisoner, Philip earl of Arundel, who died a natural death within this Tower. I may here add, that it seems to have been a common prison for others of less note, as appears by the numerous inscriptions cut on the walls, or on the wainscot. I observed on the staircase a shield of arms with a pomegranate in chief; and an escutcheon of pretence with three pears; and on the outside, near to it, the letters P. E. A. And in another place a shield with a heart in the middle, with three mullets, two, one. These I refer to the learned in heraldry to explain.

In the lieutenant's lodging is to be seen a large piece of stone or marble, with five circular tablets on the face, memorials of the Gunpowder plot. It was erected in 1607, by Sir William Wade, lieutenant of the Tower. The middle compartment, which is the largest, gives an account of the conspiracy. On a smaller are the names of the conspirators. On another, the names of the counsellors who sat in this room to examine those miscreants. Above are the arms of the counsellors. In this room is a bust, said to be that of James I. but so animated, that I should have supposed it to have been that of the gallant Raleigh. I hope that some antiquary will copy, and favor the public with the inscriptions.*

EDWARD IV. built the Lions Tower; it was originally called the Bulwark; but received the former name from its use. A menagery had very long been a piece of regal state; Henry I. had his at his manor of Woodstock, where he kept lions, leopards, lynxes, porcupines, and several other uncommon beasts. They were afterwards removed to the Tower. Edward II. commanded the sheriffs of London to pay the keepers of the king's leopards six pence a day, for the sustenance of the leopards; and three half-pence a day for the diet of the keeper, out of the fee-farm of the city. I should have mentioned before, that Henry issued his order to the sheriffs, to supply four pence a day for the maintenance of his white bear (urso nostro albo), and his keeper in the Tower of London. They were also to provide a muzzle, and an iron chain to hold the said bear out of the water; and a long cord to hold it during the time it was fishing in the Thames: they were besides ordered to build a small house in the Tower for the king's elephant (elefantem nostrum) and to make provision both for beast and keeper.*

THE royal menagery is to this day exceedingly well supplied. In April 1787, there was a singular variety of leopard, brought from Bengal. It was wholly black, but the hair was marked, on the back, sides, and neck, with round clusters of small spots, of a glossy and the most intense black; the tail hung several inches beyond the length of the legs, and was very full of hair.† Here were also two tigers; one had been here some time: and its ground-color had faded into a pale sickly sandiness; the other, young and vigorous, and almost fresh from its native woods, was nearly of an orange color; its black stripes, and the white parts, were most pure in their kinds.

THE office of the keeper of the menagery was added to that of constable of the Tower, for the sake of the emolument. In the reign of Henry VII. John de Vere, earl of Oxford, was constable, and was appointed keeper of the lions, with the salary of twelve pence per diem, and six pence for each beast.‡

‡ Rymer, xii. 276.

THE little book sold in the Tower, will give a very satisfactory account of all its curiosities, natural and artificial. To that I refer my reader. I will only say, that the room in which the artillery is kept, and the armory of small arms above (each three hundred and forty feet five inches long) do great honor to our kingdom. They are now in the most admirable order; and I am told by my son, who hath visited the most boasted in Europe, that these far exceed any he saw. They well merit the attention of our countrymen. I must also direct their attention to the fine sculpture in stone, of the royal arms surrounded by suitable trophies, on the pediment in front of the building, the work of our great artist Gibbons.

For a considerable time, there was a dispute between the crown and the city, about the right to the Tower-hill (the Gwynfryn of the Welsh). In the reign of Edward IV. the king's officers erected there a gallows, and a scaffold for the execution of offenders. The citizens complained; Edward immediately disavowed the act, by public proclamation, and resigned to them the monopoly of the ax and the halter, and vested in them the exclusive privilege of hanging, drawing, and quartering. From that time the fatal apparatus has always been provided by the city. The condemned are delivered to the sheriffs by the lieutenant, who receives from the former a receipt for their delivery; the sheriffs then see execution done, as in other places.

THE FIRST
HEADED ON TOWER-HILL.

THE first whom I recollect to have suffered here by the more honorable death of the ax, was Sir Simon de Burley, knight of the Garter, tutor of Richard II. and the most accomplished man of his time, who, in 1388, fell a victim to the malice of the potent faction, which had usurped the regal authority. Queen Anne, the good queen Anne, went on her knees to the duke of Gloucester, the king's uncle, to implore mercy; and continued in that attitude three hours before the inexorable tyrant.

THE FORMER ROUGH
OF PRISON-ERS.

THERE was, during a very long period, a barbarous meanness, a species of insult to the unhappy criminals, which is in our days happily changed into every species of tenderness and humanity, consistent with public justice and security. In revenge for the death of Sir Simon, and many others who suffered in the same cause, the great earl of Arundel, Richard Fitzalan, was hurried instantly from the place of trial, the palace at Westminster, to Tower-hill: his arms and his hands were bound; and the king glutted his eyes with the bloody scene. That great peer Thomas duke of Norfolk, who was confined here in the last year of Henry VIII. was reduced to beg for sheets. He was to have lost his head, but was saved by the death of the tyrant on the very day appointed for his execution. It is said, that it was intended that the king's death should have been concealed till the execution had taken place; but that when the officer of the Tower waited on his grace to prepare him for execution, by a fortunate guess, the duke told him, the king was dead! He was kept in custody during the next short reign, but was released on the accession of queen Mary. He mounted his horse, on the verge of fourscore, to assist in quelling the insurrection of Sir Thomas Wyatt, in 1554. This served to fill the Tower with new subjects for the mean insults of the times. Sir Thomas, and the rest of the prisoners, were brought into the Tower through the Traitors-gate. The lieutenant received them, one by one, with insults and gross abuse. When Sir Thomas appeared, gallantly dressed, the lieutenant actually collared him; Sir Thomas gave him a fierce and reproachful look, bravely telling him, This is no masteric now!

One person of rank suffered here by the more infamous death of the halter. I should not mention Sir Gervis Elwayes, lieutenant of the Tower, who was executed in 1615, for his concern in the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, but for the great instruction which may be gathered from his end, and his excellent dying speech. There is something very peculiar in his admonition to the spectators, against appealing to Heaven by a rash vow; for, having been greatly addicted to gaming, he had said seriously in his prayers, Lord, let me be hanged if ever I play more: and yet he broke it a thousand times.* Of what utility would be a sensible collection of these proofs of the FINGER OF GOD, exemplified to mankind in the detection and punishment of every species of crime!

CHAPEL OF
THE TOWER.

The church of St. Petrus ad Vincula, within the Tower, has been the undistinguishing repository of the headless bodies of numbers, who ended their days on the adjacent hill; or, when greatly favored, within the fortress. The antient church was much more splendid, it being occasionally the place at which the kings of England performed their orisons. In Henry III's time here were stalls for the king and queen; a chancel dedicated to St. Peter, and another to St. Mary. The church was adorned with a fine cross, images of saints, and various paintings benè & bonis coloribus. Also several holy figures in painted glass; all done by that early lover and patron of the arts in England, the monarch just mentioned.†

EXECUTED
PERSONS BU-RIED THERE.

FISHER, BI-SHOP OF ROCHESTER.

To the present church, after his execution, was finally removed the body of the conscientious amiable prelate Fisher, bishop of Rochester; a victim to his opinion of the pope's supremacy, and the treachery of the attorney-general Rich, who, under pretence of consulting him, obtained his confidence, and betrayed him. The pope rewarded his orthodoxy with a cardinal's hat, but it did not arrive till the poor bishop's head was on a pole on London-bridge. His headless corpse was removed, to be near that of his friend, who suffered about three weeks after, in the same cause, the great Sir Thomas More. But his body did not long keep company with that of his brother sufferer, nor his head on the bridge. His affectionate daughter, Margaret Roper, procured the one to be removed to Chelsea; and the head, accidentally blown into the Thames, to be given to her. She kept it during life as a relique, and directed that after her death it should be lodged in her arms and buried with her.

SIR THOMAS

HERE rest the beauteous Anna Bullen, and the profligate Catherine Howard; the former suffered, May 19th, 1536, under a fictitious charge of adultery, made by a tyrant lusting for a new object, and the latter on a full conviction of the same crime. George lord Rochford, the innocent brother of the former, involved in the accusation, preceded her to the grave by two days; as his infamous wife, a cause of their death, accompanied, unpitied, her mistress Catherine Howard, in execution and in sepulchre. It is impossible not to moralize on comparing the manner in which she was brought prisoner to this fatal fortress, with the gay and splendid pageantry, which attended her and her savage spouse from Greenwich by water to the same place, on May 29th, 1533; and from the Tower, two days after, with still greater magnificence, to her coronation.* She rejoiced too publicly on the death of Catherine of Arragon, whose place she most wrongfully usurped: in less than five months, she herself fell as a criminal.

ANNA BUL-
LEN.

MARGARET
COUNTESS OF
SALISBURY.

As I cannot discover the place of interment of the venerable Margaret countess of Salisbury, beheaded on the green within the Tower, on May 27th, 1541, I must suppose that it was within the chapel. There is no reason to imagine that the tyrant would pay more respect to her remains, than to those of his royal consorts. This illustrious woman was daughter to George duke of Clarence, and last of the royal line of Plantagenet. That seems to have been her only crime, except that of being mother to cardinal Pole, to whom Henry bore the most inveterate hatred. She was attainted, by a servile parliament, in 1539, upon no other proof than that of a banner being found with the five wounds of CHRIST embroidered on it. This being the symbol chosen by the northern rebels, was thought sufficient to establish her guilt. The king, on a trifling insurrection, in which it was impossible she could have any concern, ordered her to be put to death. The executioner directed her to lay her head on the block, which she refused to do, telling him, that she knew of no guilt, and would not submit to die like a traitor. He pursued her about the scaffold, aiming at her hoary head, and at length took it off, after mangling the poor victim, of seventy years of age, in the most barbarous manner.

* See a very curious account of the processions in the Antiquarian Repertory, iii. 202.

THAT meteor Thomas Cromwel, earl of Essex, the great promoter of the suppression of religious houses, experienced the common lot of the preceding. He suffered, among other charges, for being a favorer of heretics; yet died in the firm profession of the Catholic religion.

THOMAS
CROMWEL, EARL OF
ESSEX.

THE turbulent Thomas Seymour, baron Sudley, and lord high admiral, was beheaded in 1549, and buried in this church, by a warrant from his own brother, the protector Somerset. On January 24th, 1552, the protector himself mounted the same scaffold, and, notwithstanding his high rank, was flung into the same grave among the attainted herd. His ambitious rival, the instrument of his death, John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, lost his head, and was laid by his side, on the 22d of August, 1553. So short, so vain are the dreams of power and ambition !

ROBERT
EARL OF
ESSEX.

THE favorite earl of Essex, Robert Devereux, was reluctantly given to the block by his fond mistress, after a long struggle between fear and affection. Mr. Walpole observes, that it was a fashion to treat the passion of that illustrious princess as a romance. She, it is alleged, was sixty-eight, but it was forgotten that the earl was only thirty-four. Let their ages have been reversed, you would never have heard of the unhappy love of Elizabeth. Essex, impressed with a strong sense of religion, died a true penitent. When marshal Biron heard of his end, he said he died more like a priest than a soldier. Biron, in the same sad circumstances, ended his days like a frantic coward.

DUKE OF MONMOUTH.

BENEATH the communion table reposes the handsome, restless, ungrateful son of Charles II. the duke of Monmouth. His ambition, like that of many of those he followed to this place, occasioned his death. He is said to have died calmly; and to have acknowledged the guilt of rebellion: but love preserved her influence to the last moment. He was married very young, and for interested motives. He had made a connection of the most tender nature with lady Harriet Wentworth, who lived with him as his wife. He could not, with all the arguments of our best divines, be convinced of the sin of adultery; he called her the choice of his ripened years. I have been told a tradition, that lady Harriet had placed herself in a window, to take a last and farewell look; he was master enough of himself to make her a graceful bow. With more certainty can I say, that the king, on the evening of the execution, visited the widowed dutchess, to give assurances of his attention to her and her children. Consolation she did not want, for she had been separated from him; and when, at the duke's earnest request, she had an interview with him in the Tower, their interview was, as Barillon expresses it, aigre de part et d'autre.*

The repentant earl of Kilmarnock, and the rough and fearless lord Balmerino, avowing the goodness of his cause to the last, were deposited here August 18th, 1746. The inscriptions on the leaden plates of their coffins are shewn to strangers. In the following year the infamous Simon lord Lovat was interred in the same ground, after mounting the scaffold with the intrepidity of innocence. He certainly was in his dotage, or, what is more probable, lost to all sense of shame for his immoral and most abandoned life, when he could repeat to the spectators,

NOCK.

BLOOD'S ATTEMPT

Nam genus et proavos, & QUÆ NON FECIMUS IPSI, Vix ea nostra voco.

SIR RICHARD
BLOUNT AND HIS SON.

BESIDES these headless trunks, numbers of good people lie here, who went to their graves from their quiet beds. Among them, Sir Richard Blount, and Sir Michael his son, both lieutenants of the Tower. Sir Richard died in 1564; Sir Michael in 1592: a splendid monument was erected to each. They are represented in armour, kneeling; Sir Richard with his two sons, his wife, and two daughters, in the dress of the times; Sir Michael has a long beard, is attended by three sons in cloaks, his wife, and daughter.

SIR RICHARD
CHOL-MONDLY.

IN a corner, on the floor, is an antient monument of a man recumbent, his hands closed as in prayer, his hair lank, his chin beardless; his lady by him in a long hood; round his neck is a collar of SS. and a rose pendent. This is to preserve the memory of Sir Richard Cholmondly, knight, lieutenant of the Tower in the time of Henry VII.

TALBOT
KEEPER OF THE KING'S REGALIA.

I PASS over less interesting monuments, to the little stone on the floor, which records, that "Talbot Edwards, late keeper of his majesty's regalia, 30th September, 1674, aged 80," was deposited here. Was it not a shameless reign, in which no farther remembrance of this good and faithful servant was delivered to posterity? This venerable man was keeper of the regalia, when the ruffian Blood made the notorious attempt on the crown, and other ornaments of majesty. Never was a more determined villain: "with a head to contrive, and heart to execute any wickedness." Blood contrived, under the guise of a clergyman, to make acquaintance with Mr. Edwards; insinuated himself into his favor and confidence. After various visits, with the assistance of several other associates, he seized on the old man, whom he had requested to shew the jewels to his friends, gagged him, and on his resisting, struck him on the head with a mallet, and gave him several stabs. Edwards thought it prudent to counterfeit death. Blood put the crown under his parson's gown: another put the globe in his breeches: a third, not being able to conceal the sceptre by reason of its length, broke off the rich ruby and put it in his pocket. As soon as they were gone, Edwards forced out the gag, and gave the alarm; they were instantly pursued, and three of them soon taken. Blood struggled hard for his prize, saying, when it was wrested from him, It was a gallant attempt, though unsuccessful; it was for a CROWN.

THE curiosity of the king was excited to see a man engaged in so many important villanies: under pretence of obtaining discoveries, his majesty made the wretch a visit; from that moment the artful Blood dated his security: he told the king so many plausible tales; such indifference he shewed for his own life, such anxiety for that of his majesty (for he insinuated that his comrades would certainly revenge his death, even on his sacred majesty) that in a short time he obtained his pardon. It was necessary to apply to the duke of Ormond for permission, the ruffian having made the attempt on his grace's life not long before. The duke nobly answered, "If his majesty could forgive him stealing the crown, he might easily forgive the attempt upon his life; and if such was his majesty's pleasure, that was a sufficient reason for him, and his lordship (the earl of Arlington, who brought the message) might spare the rest." Blood was not only pardoned, but received into favor, had a pension of five hundred a year; and was perpetually seen at court, enjoying the smiles of majesty, and even successfully employing his interest, as a most respectable patron. But all good men looked on him with horror, and considered him as a Sicarius to a profligate set of men, to overawe any who had integrity enough to resist the measures of a most profligate court. This miscreant died peacefully in his bed, August 29th, 1680, fearlessly, and without any signs of penitence; totally hardened and forsaken by Heaven.

THE innocent Talbot Edwards, so far from receiving the grateful reward of his fidelity and sufferings, got with great difficulty a pension of two hundred a year ; and his son, who was active in taking Blood, one hundred more : but the order for the pensions was so long delayed, and the expences attending the cure of the good old man's wounds so great, that he was forced to sell his order for a hundred pounds ready money, and his son his for fifty. It is singular that this aged man survived his injuries seven years ; the attempt was made May 9th, 1671, and the inscription, contrary to the assertions of some historians, fixes his death in 1680.*

OTHERS have fallen, on this fatal hill, by the hands of lawless violence. In the rebellion of Wat Tyler, his miscreant followers pursued, with unrelenting rage, the nobility and better rank of people. That worthy primate, Sudbury archbishop of Canterbury ; Sir Robert Hales, treasurer of England ; and many others, took refuge with their youthful king in the Tower. It was then garrisoned with six hundred armed men, and six hundred archers ; who, appalled at the mob, stood motionless. The rebels seized on the primate ; Sir Robert ; John Legge, serjeant at arms, and William Appledore, the king's confessor ; all of whom they instantly beheaded on Tower-hill ; the archbishop with peculiar circumstances of cruelty, being almost hewn to pieces by their cruel rage.

JAMES LORD SAY, AND HIS SON-IN-LAW.

IN 1450, the mob under Jack Cade, in so dark and savage a period, forced out of this fortress James lord Say, whom the king had committed to appease the furious commons. They brought him to Guildhall, and from thence hurried him to the Standard in Cheapside, where they struck off his head, tied his naked body to a horse's tail, dragged it to Southwark, and there cut it into quarters. They then beheaded his son-in-law, Sir James Cromer, placed the heads on poles, and in every street made them kiss each other.* What a horrid parallel have we not seen in the late year,† amidst the polished and enlightened FRENCH!!! Two men of rank, M. de Foulon, and his son-in-law M. Berthier, were pointed out as victims to the barbarous populace. They were first hung, with a studied prolongation of their sufferings: their heads were struck off, and, by a refinement in cruelty (beyond the invention of Jack Cade) the heart of de Foulon was torn out, and brought dancing on a pole, to salute his unhappy son-in-law on his way to execution: nor was any insult to their mangled trunks omitted by the furious canaille.

* Fabian's Chronicle, part vi. 451.

† July 21st, 1793. Ed.

WITHIN the Tower, on the green before the chapel, was beheaded the accomplished lord Hastings. His fidelity to the children of his late master, Edward IV. was the cause of his death. He was dragged from the council-table, by order of their ambitious protector, Gloucester, who swore he would have his head before he dined; and such was his haste, that the unfortunate lord had only time to make a short shrift to a priest who casually passed by, and his head was taken off on a log which happened to lie in the way. So little did he expect death, that, scarcely an hour before, he was exulting in the fate of his enemies, lord Rivers, lord Richard Grey, and Sir Thomas Vaughan, at Pontefract; yet all four underwent the stroke of the headsman on the very same day. Besides these, I can make a miscellaneous recital of several who died within these walls, by natural deaths, by suicide, or by accident.

LORD
HASTINGS.

ELIZABETH, wife of Henry VII. breathed her last here in child-bed, in 1502.

ELIZABETH, WIFE OF HENRY VII.

GERALD FITZGERALD, ninth earl of Kildare, lord deputy of Ireland, disgraced, and commanded to appear before the king, was committed to this prison in 1534 on suspicion of treason. His son Thomas, whom he left his successor, fell into actual rebellion, attended with great barbarities. The old earl died of a broken heart, fortunately before the execution of his five brothers and his son, who were taken to London, and all died at Tyburn the death of traitors. They were sent to England in a ship called the Cow. A prophecy was soon after invented, that five sons of an earl of Kildare should be sent to England in a cow's belly and never again return. In 1580 the inscription on the coffin of the old earl was discovered in the Tower chapel. It relates nothing more than the day of his death, December 12th, 1534, with the pious addition of 'on whose sole ' JESU have mercy.'

HENRY,
EIGHTH EARL
OF NORTH-
UMBERLAND.

HERE may be truly said to have fled indignant to the shades the high spirit of Henry earl of Northumberland. He was confined for the same cause as the earl of Arundel, by the jealous Elizabeth. The B——, exclaims the earl, shall not have my estate; and on June 21st, 1585, shot himself with a pistol loaden with three bullets.

PHILIP EARL
ARUNDEL.

PHILIP earl of Arundel, son of the duke of Norfolk, beheaded for aspiring to the bed of Mary queen of Scots, was condemned to death for favoring that ill-fated princess. He was indeed reprieved, but suffered to languish till his death, in 1595. He was even refused the sight of his countess and children. The queen at length seemed to feel some compunction. Near the end of his life, depressed with sorrow, the earl made his earnest petition for that favor. Her highness then made him the offer of granting his petition, his pardon, his liberty, and the restoration of his titles and estates, and the company of his wife and children, on condition that he would attend her to church. All this he refused, and died soon after, on November 19th, 1595, under the age of forty; having suffered an imprisonment of ten years. He was buried in the same grave with his father. In 1624 his widow procured the removal of his remains, which she placed in an iron chest; and after a short time caused them to be re-interred in the church at Arundel. A late dutchess of the same family procured the scull, had it enchased in gold, and kept it to exalt her devotion, as a relique of a martyr to religion. In 1777, on opening a vault for the funeral of Edward duke of Norfolk, the coffin was found, having on it the following inscription:

“ PHILIPPI Comitis olim Arund’ & Surr’ ossa “ veneranda hoc loculo condita, impetratâ a Ja- “ cobo Rege veniâ, Annæ uxoris delectissimæ

 “ 6, sanctissimè transactum, piissimè, 19 Oct.

“ 1595, non absque veneni suspicione, in Domino “ obdormivit.”

HE was imprisoned in the Beauchamp Tower, in which are many memorials of this unhappy peer: one is an inscription cut with his own hand on the staircase, glorying in his innocence, and his religion.—“ Sicut peccati causa vinciri opprobrium est, ita e contra, pro CHRISTO custodiæ vincula sustinere maxima gloria est. Arundell, 28 of “ May 1587.”

THE other memorial is a sculpture of an oak bough slipped and fruited, a badge of the earls of Arundel, with Verbum DOMINI, beneath. Between those words and the oak branch, is a fret, the arms of the barony of Maltravers, and on one side of the fret is the letter R, on the other T, or Robert Turner, a priest, who is supposed to have executed this sculpture: above the branch is given the Turner arms.*

ARTHUR
 EARL OF
 ESSEX.

ARTHUR earl of Essex, accomplice with lord Russel, ended here his days. Despair seized him on his confinement, and, forsaken by Heaven, he put an end to his existence by the razor. He was of a party charged with equal freedom in religious as political principles. He vindicated and practised suicide. His death was charged on the court, but without the best grounds. The prince who could bring lord Russel to the block by a legal course, need never have incurred the odium of assassination on a less important partner of the conspiracy.

HERE died, in September, 1592, Sir John Perrot, the supposed son of Henry VIII. by Mary wife to Thomas Perrot, esq; of Haroldstone, in the county of Pembroke. In his great stature, and high spirit, he bore a strong resemblance to that monarch. Young Perrot first attracted his notice by a quarrel which he had with two yeomen of the guard, whom he foiled at the stews in Southwark. He was in high favor in the following reign; but in that of Mary he fell into disgrace, on account of his attachment to the reformed religion. When queen Elizabeth succeeded, he experienced the smiles of his sovereign and sister. At length he was constituted lord deputy of Ireland, where he became very unpopular, by reason of his haughty conduct; was recalled, unjustly accused, and condemned for treason. Naunton, in his Fragmenta Regalia,* probably gives the real cause of the queen's resentment, which was excited by a very gross thing which he had said of his royal mistress. His sentence was respited; but he died of a broken heart, unable, from his lofty spirit, to brook the ill-treatment he met with from one he thought so near an ally.

LADY ARABELLA
STUART.

IN this prison also sunk a victim to unmerited misfortunes, the innocent Arabella Stuart, daughter of Charles Stuart, earl of Lenox, and younger brother to lord Darnley, father to James I. Her affinity to the crown brought her under the jealousy of both Elizabeth, and that monarch. One object of the conspiracy in 1603, for which lord Cobham, Sir Walter Raleigh, and others, were condemned, was supposed to be that of placing the crown on the head of this unfortunate lady; on which she was confined to her own house. She found means to be married privately to Sir William Seymour, second son of Edward lord Beauchamp, son of the earl of Hertford. On the discovery of the wedding, he was committed to the Tower: she to close custody at the house of Sir Thomas Parry, at Lambeth. They artfully contrived their escape on the same day: June 3d, 1611: he arrived safe at Dunkirk; the lady was taken in Calais road, and committed to the Tower, where her misfortunes deprived her of her senses.* She was released by death, September 27th, 1615; and found an honorable interment in Henry VIIth's chapel, near the remains of her ill-fated relation Mary queen of Scots. Her husband lived to succeed to the title of Duke of Somerset; and was the faithful servant and friend of Charles I.

I SHALL mention two other noblemen who were confined within these walls, on account of some particularities which attended their durance. The first is Henry earl of Northumberland, imprisoned on the very just suspicion of being privy to the Gunpowder treason. During the time he was in custody, he amused himself most rationally in the company of learned men, who were permitted to have access to him. Among others, were three who were called his Wizards: possibly he might be fond of astronomy, or dabble in judicial astrology; circumstances that, with the vulgar, might easily fasten on him the imputation of dealing with the devil.

HENRY,
NINTH EARL
OF NORTH-UMBERLAND, AND HIS WIZARDS.

A VERY remarkable accident befel Henry Wriothesly, earl of Southampton, the friend and companion of the earl of Essex, in his fatal insurrection: after he had been confined here a short time, he was surprized by a visit from his favorite cat, which had found its way to the Tower; and, as tradition says, reached its master by descending the chimney of his apartment. I have seen at Bulstrode, the summer residence of the late dutchess of Portland, an original portrait of this earl, in the place of his confinement, in a black dress and cloak, with the faithful animal sitting by him.* Perhaps this picture might have been the foundation of the tale.

LORD CHAM-
CELLOR JEF-FRIES.

THE fallen lord chancellor, the cruel instrument of despotism under James II. died, imprisoned here, of a broken heart, aided by intemperance. He was first interred in the church, belonging to the Tower; and afterward was removed to that of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, and deposited near the body of his rakish son, lord Wem. In my younger days, I have heard of a hard-hearted insult on this once great man, during his imprisonment. He received, as he thought, a present of Colchester oysters; and expressed great satisfaction at the thought of having some friend yet left: but, on taking off the top of the barrel, instead of the usual contents, appeared an halter!

GRYFFYDD,
FATHER OF
OUR LAST PRINCE LLE-WELYN.

To conclude this melancholy list, I shall return to antient times, to lament the sad fate of my countrymen, victims to English ambition. Here was basely confined, by Henry III. my countryman Gryffydd, father of our last prince Llewelyn ap Gryffydd; who, impatient of imprisonment, attempted to escape by lowering himself from the walls: the line he was descending by broke, and, being of a great bulk, he was dashed to pieces, and perished in a most miserable manner.*

* In the same collection is another portrait of the same nobleman, out of confinement, richly dressed, with a rich helmet and armour lying by him.

It is supposed that many of the Welsh nobility, imprisoned within this fortress, had obtained leave that part of their libraries might be sent to them, for their amusement in their solitary hours: so that in time it became a repository of Welsh literature. These valuable manuscripts were at length burnt by the villainy of one Scolan, to the irreparable loss of our history and our poetry. Gutto'r Glynn, who wrote about the year 1450, thus relates the fact:

WELSH MA-NUSCRIPTS

Llyfrau Cymru a'u usfrudd, I'r Tŵr Gwynn aethant ar gudd;

i. e. "The books of Wales, and their destroyer, " were concealed in the White Tower. Villainous " was the deed of Scolan, when he threw the heaps " of books into the fire."†

In the next reign, to the eternal disgrace of the great Edward, the head of the son of Gryffydd, the last of our princes, was placed on these battlements, insultingly crowned with ivy, for gallantly defending his hereditary dominions, to which he had as good a right as his more fortunate conqueror had to the crown of England. And, to fill the measure of misfortune, in a small time after, the head of prince Dafydd was sent to accompany that of his ill-fated brother.

OWEN TU-DOR.

DAFYDD LHWYD AP LLEWELYN o Vathavarn, a poet, who flourished in 1480, gives our countryman Owen Tudor, grandfather to Henry VII. a nobler prison than I fear we can warrant from history.* He certainly thought it derogating from the honor of Wales, to send his hero to Newgate like a common felon. Thus he bewails his unfortunate state, in a Cywydd composed on the occasion. I shall give a translation of the parts relative to the subject, by the same ingenious friend,† to whom I lie under so many similar obligations.

TUDOR, in himself a host,
High-born Owen, Cambria's boast,
Cambria's flower imprison'd lies,
Where London's lofty towers rise.
Unjust the pride, and rash the power,
That doom'd him to yon hostile Tower;
For him our eyes with pity flow,
For him our breasts with vengeance glow.
Are Owen's feet with fetters bound?
With poetry I'll ease the wound:
Around his legs my muse shall twine,
And break them with her strains divine.
How wondrous are the powers of song,
To succour them who suffer wrong!

* See Rymer's Fœd. x. 685, 709.

† The Reverend RICHARD WILLIAMS, of Fron. See Appendix for a similar Poem, by the same Gentleman.

The next explains the cause of his imprisonment.

'Tis not for plunder, fraud, or debt,
That Owen this misfortune met.
'Tis not for lawless force of arms;
But for a queen's resistless charms,
Fertile Gallia's daughter fair,
That Owen's feet those fetters wear.
Worthy, virtuous, comely, tall,
CATHERINE did his heart enthrall.
Who could blame th' adventurous youth?
Fam'd for valor, honor, truth.

To him this gem of Gallia's shore
Three renowned children bore,
Warlike youths, their father's pride,
FRANCE's royal blood allied;
Grandsons to the Gallic throne;
Loyal barons of our own.
From them in future times shall spring
Many a gallant British king.*

IN the reign of Richard III. Sir William Gryffydd, of Penrhyn, chamberlain of North Wales, suffered imprisonment in the Tower, at the same time with lord Strange, for their supposed attachment to the interests of the duke of Richmond, afterward Henry VII. Sir William had also his poetical friend, in Howel ap Reinalt, who, in a Cywydd, celebrates the confinement of his patron.

A LITTLE to the south of East Smithfield, is the hospital of St. Catherine's, originally founded in 1148, by Matilda of Boulogne, wife of king

ST. CATHE-
RINE'S
HOSPITAL.

* See the account of Owen Tudor, in my Tour in Wales, ii. 256.
—ed. 1810, iii. 46.

Stephen, for the repose of her son Baldwin, and her daughter Matilda: and for the maintenance of a master, brothers and sisters, and other poor persons. In 1278, Eleanor, widow of Henry, possessed herself of it, dissolved the old foundation, re-founded it in honor of the same saint, for a master, three brethren chaplains, three sisters, ten Bedes women, and six poor scholars. Queen Philippa, wife of Edward III., was a great benefactress to this hospital: and to this day it remains under queenly patronage, according to the reservation made by the pious re-foundress Eleanor. Our present gracious queen is the twenty-ninth royal patroness.

THE mastership is a sinecure of considerable value. In this hospital is a house for him, and all its members. The reader will find the disposition of them, in the plan printed by Mr. Nichols, in the account of St. Katherine's hospital, and its collegiate church; a work of that able antiquary the late Andrew Coltee Ducarel, LL. D. He was interred in the collegiate church, where a plain piece of marble informs us of little more than the period of his existence.

CHURCH.

THE church is a handsome gothic building, but nearly lost in the various houses, which shut it from public view. The east window is very elegant; and in the modern improvements, the utmost propriety is preserved in the imitation of the an-tient architecture. The wooden pulpit is a curiosity : on its eight sides are represented the antient building, and different gates of the hospital ; beneath each compartment extend, EZRA THE SCRIBE—STOOD UPON A—PULPIT OF WOOD—WHICH HE HAD—MADE FOR THE—PREACHIN Neh—e. chap. viii. 4.

UNDER one of the stalls is a very good carving of the head of queen Philippa, and another of her spouse. They bear a resemblance to the monumental sculpture of those great personages.

THE most remarkable monument is that of John Holland, duke of Exeter, who is represented recumbent, with a fillet round his head, and in a long gown, the weeds of peace.* By him are placed the figure of his first wife Anne, daughter of Edmund earl Stafford, and widow of Edmund Mortimer, earl of March ; and another of his sister Constance, first, wife to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk ; and afterward to Sir John Grey, eldest son of Reginald lord Grey, of Ruthen. Ashmole says, that she was represented, on the tomb, with the Garter round her left arm, a mark of distinction on only two other monuments : but time hath obliterated this badge of honor. This potent peer was a great benefactor to the hospital, founded in it a chauntry ; and bequeathed to the high altar in the church, "a cuppe of byroll, garnished with gold, perles, and precious stones, to be put in the sacrament," and a number of other valuable effects. He died in peace in 1447, a wonderful thing in his family; not fewer than four of this great house, in little more than a century, having fallen by violent deaths.

THE BERE-
HOUSE.

BELOW St. Catherine's, on the river side, stood the great breweries or Bere-house, as it is called in the map published in the first volume of the Civitates Orbis. They were subject to regulations as early as the reign of Henry VII.; who, in 1492, licenses John Merchant, a Fleming, to export fifty tons of ale called Berre.* And in the same reign one Geffry Gate, probably an officer of the king's, spoiled the brewhouses at St. Catherine's twice, either for sending too much abroad unlicensed, or for brewing it too weak for their home customers.† The demand for this article from foreign parts increased to a high degree; in the reign of queen Elizabeth, five hundred tons were exported at once, as is expressed for the queen's use, at one time; probably for the service of her army in the Low Countries; three hundred and fifty barrels to Embden; three hundred to Amsterdam; and again eight hundred to Embden. At this time there seems to have been a free exportation, except when checked by proclamation, for fear of enhancing the price of corn, by excess of brewing in scarce times ; but even then it was permitted by the royal licence.*

THOSE who wish to attempt to restore the spirit of the boisterous reign of Henry, as far as depended on the boasted British liquor, may use the following receipt : † x quarters malte.

ii quarters wheet.

ii quarters ootos.

xl lb. weight of hoppys, to make lx barrel of seugyll beer.

It is not in my power to trace the progress of this important article of trade. Let me only say that it is now a national concern : for the duty on malt, from July 5th 1785, to the same day 1786, produced a million and half of money, ‡ to the support of the state, from a liquor which invigorates the bodies of its willing subjects, to defend the blessings they enjoy ; while that from the Stygian gin enervates and incapacitates. In the year ending January 12th, 1812, the duty on beer amounted to 3,176,852*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.*½ Ed.

than fifty thousand pounds to his own share. The sight of a great London brewhouse exhibits a magnificence unspeakable. The vessels evince the extent of the trade. Mr. Meux, of Liquorpond-street, Gray's-inn-lane, can shew twenty-four tons; containing, in all, thirty-five thousand barrels; one alone holds four thousand five hundred barrels of wholesome liquor; which enables the London porter-drinkers to undergo tasks that ten gin-drinkers would sink under. In the present year he has built a vessel sixty feet in diameter, a hundred and seventy-six feet in circumference, and twenty-three feet in height. It cost five thousand pounds in building; and contains from ten to twelve thousand barrels of beer; valued at about twenty thousand pounds. A dinner was given to two hundred people at the bottom; and two hundred more, joined the company to drink success to the vat! He has one vat that holds twenty thousand barrels of porter, cost ten thousand pounds in building, and when full of beer is worth forty thousand pounds; is seventy feet in diameter; thirty feet deep: the circumference I could not measure. Many of the hoops weigh three ton, and cost three hundred pounds each. He is building another of the same size. There is one that holds ten thousand barrels, one five thousand, and about forty that hold from five to two thousand; containing in the whole one hundred thousand barrels. He had five hundred pockets of hops, and was going to increase them to one thousand. He pays three hundred pounds a week duty, nearly one hundred pounds a week to men in the yard; and has eighty horses. He is going to pull down the old brew-house, and rebuild it on the same plan with the immense building already done; which will employ five hundred men. It would have been done this year, 1795, but could not get men. All this, without reckoning in-door and out-door clerks, butts, &c.

At a time when they were raising sacks of malt up into the store-rooms, one of the men (and he was one of the strongest) being in the waggon fixing the girth round the sacks to be drawn up by the crane, his thumb accidentally got fastened between the girth and sacks, and the men above began, before he could disengage himself, to draw him up with the sacks, and when at the height, which is sixty feet, the girth broke, and he came down, with the sacks, into the waggon without being much hurt: so little that he got well in a fortnight, and about his business.—Of this I was informed by Mr. Sheperd, one of the clerks.

I AM now arrived at the very eastern extent of London, as it was in the age of queen Elizabeth. A small village or two might be found in the remaining part of the county of Middlesex, but bordered by marshes, which frequently experienced the ravages of the river. This tract had been a manor in the Saxon times, called Stibben-hedde, STEPNEY.

i. e. Stibben-heath. In later days it belonged to John de Pulteney, who had been four times lord mayor, viz. in 1330, 1331, 1333, and 1336. The bishops of London had here a palace, as appears from antient records, "Given from our palace of Stebon-hyth, or Stebonheath," which is supposed to have filled the space now covered with several tenements.* An antient square gateway is I think still standing. It is built of brick, prettily disposed in lozenge forms.† This likewise is engraven by Mr. Smith. It appears that the side next to the Thames had been embanked, to resist the fury of the floods. From the 26th of Edward I. several inquisitions were made to examine the state of the banks and ditches, and the tenants, who were found negligent, were presented as delinquents.‡ The church, which stands far from the river, was originally called Ecclesia omnium Sanctorum, but was afterward styled that of St. Dunstan; for the whole body of saints was obliged to give way to him who had the courage to take the devil himself by the nose.§ The church is by no means distinguished by its architecture. In it were in-tered the remains of the illustrious Sir Thomas Spert, comptroller of the navy in the time of Henry VIII. and to whom this kingdom was indebted for that salutary foundation the TRINITY-HOUSE.* Here also may be found that curious epitaph mentioned by the Spectator:

Here Thomas Saffin lyes interr'd: Ah why
Born in New England, did in London die? &c.

This vast parish is at present divided into six others, yet the mother parish still remains of great extent.

PERRY'S DOCKS.

THE dock and ship yard, the property of Mr. Perry, the greatest private dock in all Europe, is at the extremity of this parish, at Blackwall, the upper part of the eastern side of the Isle of Dogs. It may be called the eastern end of London, being nearly a continued succession of six miles and a half of streets, from hence to Tyburn turnpike.

WAPPING.

THE great extent of Wapping, which stretches along the river side from St. Katherine's, arose from the opinion of the commissioners of sewers, in 1571, that nothing could secure the manor from the depredations of the water, more effectually than the building of houses: for they thought the tenants would not fail being attentive to the safety of their lives and property. The plan succeeded, and in our days we see a vast and populous town

* He died September 8th, 1541.

added to the antient precincts (which had stagnated for ages). Wapping forms a long narrow street, well paved, and handsomely flagged on both sides, winding along the banks of the Thames, as far as the end of Limehouse, an extent of nearly two miles; and inhabited by multitudes of seafaring men, alternate occupants of sea and land: their floating tenements lie before them. In fact, the whole river, from London bridge, for a vast way, is covered with a double forest of masts, with a narrow avenue in mid-channel. These give importance and safety to the state, and supply the mutual wants of the universe. We send the necessaries and luxuries of our island to every part; and, in return, receive every article which should satiate the most luxurious, wealth that ought to make avarice cry, Hold! enough! and matters for speculation for the laudable and delicate longings of the intellectual world.

THE hamlet of Shadwell is a continuation of the SHADWELL.
 buildings along the river. Between the houses and the water, in all this long tract of street, are frequent docks, and small building yards. The passenger is often surprized with the sight of the prow of a ship rising over the street, and the hulls of new ones appearing at numbers of openings. But all that filth and stench, which Stow complains of, exists no longer. Execution Dock still EXECUTION DOCK.
 remains at Wapping, and is in use as often as a melancholy occasion requires. The criminals are to this day executed on a temporary gallows placed at low-water mark; but the custom of leaving the body to be overflowed by three tides, has long since been omitted.

RADCLIFF. THE village of Radcliff, to which Wapping now joins, is of some antiquity. From hence the gallant Sir Hugh Willoughby, on May the 20th, 1553, took his departure on his fatal voyage for discovering the north-east passage to China. He sailed with great pomp by Greenwich, where the court then lay. Mutual honors were payed on both sides. The council and courtiers appeared at the windows, and the people covered the shores. The young king alone lost the noble and novel sight; for he then lay on his death-bed; so that the principal object of the parade was disappointed.*

LIMEHOUSE. LIMEHOUSE is a continuation of the town along the river-side: it is a new creation: and its church, one of the fifty new churches, was finished in 1724.

POPLAR. This may be called the end of London on the water-side; but it is continued by means of Poplar, a chapelry in the parish of Stepney (antiently a regal manor, so named from its abundance of poplar trees) across the upper part of the Isle of Dogs, in a strait line to the river Lea, the division of this county from Essex.

* Huckluyt, i. 239.

WAPPING, Shadwell, and Limehouse, have their respective churches; and Poplar its chapel. The two first have nothing to attract the eye. Limehouse has its awkward tower, a dull square rising out of another, embellished with pilasters; heavy pinnacles rise out of the uppermost: the whole proves how unhappily Mr. Hawksmoor, the architect of Bloomsbury church, exerted his genius in the obsolete art of steeple-building. In the year 1730 it was added to the bills of mortality.

IN our walk through Limehouse, we crossed the New Cut, or Poplar canal, near its discharge into the river. This was begun about twenty years ago; runs by Bromley, and joins the river Lea near Bow, where barges enter by means of a lock called Bow-lock. This canal is about a mile and a quarter in length; and serves to bring to our capital corn, malt, and flour, from the neighborhood of Hertford, and several other counties, which put their productions on board the barges at that town. It is also of great use to convey to the Thames the produce of the great distilleries near Bow; and also to the internal counties coals, and several articles from the metropolis. This canal saves the great circuit of passing down to Lea-mouth, and thence round the Isle of Dogs; a navigation often impeded by contrary winds and tides, which frequently fall out so adverse, as to occasion great delays. Yet this canal by no means annihilates the use of the river Lea to and from its mouth ; but barges go indifferently either way, as conveniency, or the circumstances above-mentioned, occur. Besides, many barges will enter the river Lea to save the navigation expences of the New Cut.

LIMEHOUSE
DOCK.

LIMEHOUSE Dock is a little farther to the south-east, and is much used.

THE FOLLY.

WE finished our walk, and dined at a small house called the Folly, on the water's edge, almost opposite to the splendid hospital at Greenwich, where we sat for some hours enjoying the delicious view of the river, and the moving picture of a succession of shipping perpetually passing and re-passing.

BILLS OF MORTALITY.

IT is wonderful, that in this great city there should have been no regular Census ;* but that we must depend on the account of the number of inhabitants from the uncertain calculation of the bills of mortality. I will allow them to be delivered annually, by the only censors we have, the company of parish-clerks, with all possible accuracy, as far as their knowledge extends : but, as it is admitted that a number of people find their burials in cœmeteries without the bills, equal nearly to those which are annually reported to be interred within their jurisdiction, the uncertainty of the enumeration collected from them must be allowed. In the last year, 19,697 were buried within the bills: if the above assertion* is well founded, the sum must be 39,394. I refer the decision of the numbers of inhabitants to the skilful in calculation. I have heard it averred that the present number is a million. Three ingenious writers have made the following estimates. Mr. Howlet gives in his at 800,000, Mr. Wales at 650,000, and Doctor Price at 500,000. Maitland gives the total, in the time of his publication (1756) to have been 725,341.† The increase of London since his days gives a probability that the enumeration is not much exaggerated.

BILLS of mortality took rise in 1592, in which began a great pestilence, which continued till the 18th of December 1595. During this period they were kept in order to ascertain the number of persons who died: but when the plague ceased, the bills were discontinued. They were resumed again in 1603. At the original institution, there were only a hundred and nine parishes: others were gradually added, and, by the year 1681, the number was a hundred and thirty-two: since that

AMONG the multitudes who fall victims to disease, is a melancholy account of the rural youth, who crowd here in numbers, laboring under the delusion of preferment: some perish soon, without even attaining a service; or, urged by want, fall under the cognizance of justice. Others get admission into shops, or into places, where they experience hard work, hard wages, hard lodgings, and scanty food. They soon fall ill, are neglected, or flung into an hospital when passed all relief: they perish. Their native villages want their innocent labor, and the whole rustic community, I may say the whole kingdom, suffers for the indiscreet ambition of these unhappy youths or of their simple parents.

RADCLIFF
HIGHWAY.

WE varied our road on our return, by taking that of Radcliff Highway, a broad and very long street, ending in East Smithfield. On the north side stands another of the fifty new churches,

* To satisfy the curiosity of those who have not opportunity of seeing a Bill of Mortality, I have printed that of 1791, at the end of this book.

St. George's Middlesex: square rises out of square, to compose the steeple: its upper story is incomprehensible, the outside stuck around with chimney-like columns, square at the lower parts, above making a sudden transition into the round. This church was begun in 1715; finished in 1729: and, by the eccentricity of the style, may fairly be suspected to have had Mr. Hawksmoor for its builder.*

ST. GEORGE'S
MIDDLESEX.

At the end of this street we found ourselves in the midst of Rag-fair, in the fullest hour of business. The articles of commerce by no means belie the name. There is no expressing the poverty of the goods: nor yet their cheapness. A distinguished merchant, engaged with a purchaser, observing me to look on him with great attention, called out to me, as his customer was going off with his bargain, to observe that man, For, says he, I have actually clothed him for fourteen pence.

RAG-FAIR.

A LITTLE farther on to the east, stood the abby of St. Mary of the Graces, called also the New Abby, and Eastminster, in opposition to Westminster, in respect to its situation. It was founded by Edward III. in 1349, in the new church-yard of the Holy Trinity, and filled with Cisterians. The church-yard was made by John

Corey, clerk, on occasion of the dreadful pestilence which raged in that reign, so that there was not room in the common church-yards to inter the dead. Edward was moved to his piety by a fright which seized him during a violent storm, in his way to France; when he vowed, if he got safe to shore, he would found a monastery to the honor of God, and the Lady of Grace, if she would grant him the grace of coming safe on shore.* At the Dissolution its revenues, according to Dugdale, amounted to 5,406*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* It was granted to Sir Arthur Darcie, in 1540, who pulled it entirely down. "In place thereof," says Stow, "is builded a large store-house for victual, and convenient ovens are builded for baking of bisket to serve hir majesties shippes." The present Victualling Office succeeded the original building, and is allotted for the same purpose.

CUSTOM-
HOUSE.

FROM hence I passed by the Tower, to the Custom-house, a little to the west of that fortress. On this spot is the busy concourse of all nations, who pay their tribute towards the support of Great Britain. The present building is of brick and stone; before which, ships of three hundred and fifty tons can lie and discharge their cargo. There was a custom-house here, built as early as the year 1385, by John Churchman,† one of the sheriffs of London; but at that period, and long after, the customs were collected in different parts of the city, and in a very irregular manner. About the year 1559 the loss to the revenue was first discovered, and an act passed to compel people to land their goods in such places as were appointed by the commissioners of the revenue; and this was the spot fixed on: a Custom-house was erected, which being destroyed by the great fire, was rebuilt by Charles II. In 1718, it underwent the same fate, and was restored in its present form. Before the Custom-house was established here, the principal place for receiving the duties was at Billingsgate. As early as 979, or the reign of Etheldred, a small vessel was to pay ad Bitynggesgate one penny halfpenny as a toll; a greater, bearing sails, one penny; a keel or hulk (Ceol vel Hulcus) four pence; a ship laden with wood, one piece for toll; and a boat with fish, one halfpenny; or a larger, one penny.* We had even then trade with France for its wines; for mention is made of ships from Rouen, which came here and landed them, and freed them from toll, i. e. payed their duties. What they amounted to I cannot learn. But in 1268 the half year's customs, for foreign merchandize in the city of London, came only to 75*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* In 1331,

IN 1590. IN 1590, towards the end of the glorious reign of Elizabeth, our customs brought in 50,000*l.* a year. They had at first been farmed at 14,000*l.* a year; afterward raised to 42,000*l.*; and finally to the sum I mention, and still to the same person, Sir Thomas Smith.

IN Water-lane, a little to the north-west of the Custom-house, is the Trinity-house; a society founded in 1515, at a period in which the British navy began to assume a system. The founder was Sir Thomas Spert comptroller of the navy, and commander of the great ship Henry Grace de Dieu. It is a corporation, consisting of a master, four wardens, eight assistants, and eighteen elder brethren;† selected from commanders in the navy and the merchant service; and now and then as a compliment some of the first nobility are admitted. They may be considered as guardians of our ships, military and commercial. Their powers are very extensive: they examine the mathematical children of Christ's Hospital; masters of his majesty's ships; they appoint pilots for the

SIR JOHN
LEAKE.

THIS house is unworthy of the greatness of its design. In the council-room are some portraits of eminent men. The most remarkable is that of Sir John Leake, with his lank grey locks, and a loose night-gown, with a mien very little indicative of his high courage, and active spirit. He was the greatest commander of his time, and engaged in most actions of note during the reigns of king William and queen Anne. To him was committed the desperate, but successful attempt of breaking the boom, previous to the relief of Londonderry. He distinguished himself greatly at the battle of La Hogue ; assisted at the taking of Gibraltar ; and afterward, as commander in chief, reduced Barcelona ; took Carthage, and brought Sar- dimia and Minorca to submit to Charles, rival to Philip for the crown of Spain. He was made a lord of the admiralty, but declined the offer of being head of the commission: at the accession of George I. averse to the new family, he retired; but with the approving pension of 600*l.* a year. He lived privately at Greenwich, where he died in 1720, and was buried in a manner suitable to his merits, in the church at Stepney. His life was written, and privately printed on large paper, octavo, in 1750, by Stephen Martin Leake, esq; late garter king at arms. Only fifty copies were printed; so that the book bears an immoderate price.

It is in this house that the business of the institution is carried on; but the mother-house is at Deptford, the corporation being named The master, wardens, and assistants of the guild or fraternity of the most glorious and undivided Trinity, and of St. Clement, in the parish of Deptford Strond, in the county of Kent.*

AFTER the Custom-house, the first place of note is Billingsgate, or, to adapt the spelling to the conjectures of antiquaries, who go beyond the "realms of Chaos and old Night," Belin's-gate, or the gate of Belinus king of Britain, fellow-adventurer with Brennus king of the Gauls, at

For fear of falling on some inglorious name, I submit to the etymology; but must confess there does not appear any record of a gate at this place: his son Lud was more fortunate, for Ludgate preserves his memory to every citizen, who knows the just value of antiquity. Gate here signifies only a place where there was a concourse of people;* a common quay or wharf, where there is a free going in and out of the same.† This was a small port for the reception of shipping, and, for a considerable time, the most important place for the landing of almost every article of commerce. It was not till the reign of king William that it became celebrated as a fish-market. In 1699, by act of parlement, it was made a free port for fish, which might be sold there every day in the week except Sunday. The object of this has long been frustrated, and the epicure who goes (as was a frequent practice) to Billingsgate to eat fish in perfection, will now be cruelly disappointed.

I CANNOT give a list of the fishes most acceptable in the Saxon ages; but there is a list of those which were brought to market in the reign of

FISHES BROUGHT TO TABLE.

AMONG these fishes, let me observe, that the conger is, at present, never admitted to any good table; and to speak of serving up a porpess whole, or in part, would set your guests a-staring. Yet, such is the difference of taste, both these fishes were in high esteem. King Richard's master cooks have left a most excellent receipt for Congur in Sawse;* and as for other great fish, it was either eaten roasted, or salted, or in broth, or furmente with porpesse.† The learned Doctor Caius even tells us the proper sauce, and says, that it should be the same with that for a Dolphin;‡ another dish unheard of in our days.

I CONFESS myself unacquainted with the words Barkey, Bran, and Betule: Sard was probably the Sardine or Pilchard: I am equally at a loss about Croplings, and Rumb: but the pickled Balenes were certainly the Pholas Dactylus;§ the Balanus of Rondeletius de Testaceis, 28; and the Dattili of the modern Italians, which are to this day eaten, and even pickled.

To this list of sea-fishes, which were admitted in those days to table, may be added the sturgeon, and ling; and there is twice mention, in archbishop Neville's great feast, of a certain fish, both roasted and baked, unknown at present, called a Thirl-pool.

* Forme of Cury, 52. † 53, 39, 56. ‡ Caii opuscula, 116.
§ British Zoology, ed. 1812. iv. 156.

THE seal was also reckoned a fish, and, with the sturgeon and porpesse, were the only fresh fishes which, by the 33d of Henry VIII. were permitted to be bought of any stranger at sea, between England and France, Flanders, and Zealand.

ON April 11th of the present year, I passed through Billingsgate, and observed on the ground, some large pieces of ice, in which I was told the salmon from Berwick, and other parts of our northern fishery, was packed in boxes. The ice is preserved in ice-houses throughout the winter entirely for that purpose.

A LITTLE to the west is London-bridge. The year of its foundation is not settled. The first mention of it is in the laws of Ethelred, which fix the tolls of vessels coming to Billingsgate, or ad Pontem. It could not be prior to the year 993, when Unlaf, the Dane, sailed up the river as high as Staines,* without interruption: nor yet after the year 1016, in which Ethelred died: and the great Canute, king of Denmark, when he besieged London, was impeded in his operations by a bridge, which even at that time must have been strongly fortified, to oblige him to have recourse to the following vast expedient:—He caused a prodigious ditch to be cut on the south side of the Thames, at Rotherhithe, or Redriff, a little to the east of Southwark, which he continued at a distance from the south end of the bridge, in form of a semicircle, opening into the western part of the river. Through this he drew his ships, and effectually completed the blockade of the city.* But the valour of the citizens obliged him to raise the siege. Evidences of this great work were found in the place called The Dock Head, at Redriff, where it began. Fascines of hazels, and other brush-wood, fastened down with stakes, were discovered in digging that dock, in 1694; and in other parts of its course have been met with, in ditching, large oaken planks, and numbers of piles.†

FIRST OF TIMBER.

THE bridge originated from the public spirit of the college of priests of St. Marie Overie. Before, there had been a ferry, left by her parents to their only daughter Mary; who, out of the profits, founded a nunnery and endowed it with the profits of the boat. This house was afterward converted into the college of priests, who not only built the bridge but kept it in repair: but it must be understood that the first bridge was of timber, the materials at hand, and most probably rudely put together. This account is given by Stow, from the report of Bartholomew Linsted, alias Fowle; last prior of St. Marie Overie; but was doubted, because the work has been supposed to be too great, and too disinterested for a college of priests, who were to give up the certain profits of the ferry, for those resulting precariously from an expensive undertaking. Even the existence of a religious house before the Conquest has been suspected: but the Domesday book puts that out of doubt, by informing us, Ipse episcopus habet unum monasterium in Sudwerche. Numbers of useful, as well as pious works, in early days, originated from the instigation of the churchmen, who often had the honor of being called the founders, when the work itself was performed by their devotees. Neither is it to be supposed that they could keep it in repair: the same zeal which impelled people to contribute to the building, operated in the investiture of land for its future support; and this appears to have been done in several instances; yet the endowments were so small, that a supplementary tax was often raised.

IN 1136, the bridge was burnt down. By the year 1163 it grew so ruinous as to occasion its being rebuilt, under the care of one Peter, curate of St. Mary Colechurch, a celebrated architect of those times. It was soon after determined to build a bridge of stone, and, about the year 1176, the same Peter was employed again. It proved the work of thirty-three years: the architect died four years before it was completed; and another clergyman, Isebert, master of the schools of Xaintes, was recommended to the citizens, by king John, for the honor of finishing it;* but they rejected their prince's choice, and committed the work to three merchants of London, who completed it in 1209. Peter was buried in a beautiful chapel, probably of his own construction, dedicated to St. Thomas, which stood on the east side, in the ninth pier from the north end, and had an entrance from the river, as well as the street, by a winding staircase. It was beautifully paved with black and white marble, and in the middle was a tomb, supposed to contain his remains.

THIS great work was founded on enormous piles, driven as closely as possible together: on their tops were laid long planks ten inches thick, strongly bolted; and on them was placed the base of the pier, the lowermost stones of which were bedded in pitch, to prevent the water from damaging the work: round all were the piles which are called the Sterlings, designed for the preservation of the foundation piles. These contracted the space between the piers so greatly, as to occasion, at the retreat of every tide, a fall of five feet, or a number of temporary cataracts, which, since the foundation of the bridge, have occasioned the loss of many thousand lives. The water, at spring-tides, rises to the height of about eighteen feet. The length of this vast work is nine hundred and fifteen feet, the exact breadth of the river. The number of arches was nineteen, of unequal dimensions, and greatly deformed by the sterlings, and the houses on each side, which overhung and leaned in a most terrific manner. In most places they hid the arches, and nothing appeared but the rude piers. I well remember the street on London-bridge, narrow, darksome, and dangerous to passengers from the multitude of carriages: frequent arches of strong timber crossed the street, from the tops of the houses, to keep them together, and from falling into the river. Nothing but use could preserve the repose of the inmates, who soon grew deaf to the noise of the falling waters, the clamors of watermen, or the frequent shrieks of drowning wretches. Most of the houses were tenanted by pin or needle-makers, and oecconomical ladies were wont to drive from the St. James's end of the town, to make cheap purchases. Fuller tells us, that Spanish needles were made here first in Cheapside, by a negro, who died without communicating the art. Elias Crouse, a German, in the reign of Elizabeth, was more liberal, and first taught the method to the English. Fuller's definition of a needle is excellent, quasi NE IDLE.

* Maitland, Hist. Lond. i. 45.

PIN-MAKERS.

DRAW-BRIDGE.

IN the bridge were three openings on each side, with ballustrades, to give passengers a sight of the water and shipping. In one part had been a draw-bridge, useful either by way of defence, or for the admission of ships into the upper part of the river. This was protected by a strong tower. It served to repulse Fauconbridge the Bastard, in his general assault on the city in 1471, with a set of banditti, under pretence of rescuing the unfortunate Henry, then confined in the Tower. Sixty houses were burnt on the bridge on this occasion.* It also served to check, and in the end annihilate, the ill-conducted insurrection of Sir Thomas Wyat, in the reign of queen Mary. The top of this tower, in the sad and turbulent days of this kingdom, used to be the shambles of human flesh, and covered with the heads or quarters of unfortunate partizans. Even so late as the year 1598, Hentzner, the German traveller, with German accuracy, counted on it above thirty heads.† The old map of the city, in 1597, represents them in a most horrible cluster.

AT the north end of the bridge one Peter Corbis, a Dutchman,‡ in the year 1582, invented and placed an engine to force the water of the Thames into leaden pipes, to supply many of the adjacent parts of the city. It has, since that time, been so greatly improved, by the skill of the English mechanics, as to become a most curious as well as useful piece of machinery, and to be extremely worthy the attention of those conversant in that branch of science.

I MUST not quit the bridge, without noticing an unparalleled calamity, which happened on it within four years after it was finished. A fire began on it at the Southwark end; multitudes of people rushed out of London to extinguish it; while they were engaged in this charitable design, the fire seized on the opposite end, and hemmed in the crowd. Above three thousand persons perished in the flames, or were drowned by overloading the vessels which were hardy enough to attempt their relief.

DREADFUL
FIRE.

THE gallant action of Edward Osborne, ancestor to the duke of Leeds, when he was apprentice to Sir William Hewet, clothworker, must by no means be forgotten. About the year 1536, when his master lived in one of these tremendous houses, a servant-maid was playing with his only daughter in her arms, in a window over the water, and accidentally dropt the child. Young Osborne, who was witness to the misfortune, instantly sprung into the river, and, beyond all expectation, brought her safe to the terrified family. Several persons of rank payed their addresses to her, when she was marriageable; among others, the earl of Shrewsbury: but Sir William gratefully decided in favor of Osborne; OSBORNE, says he, saved her, and OSBORNE shall enjoy her.* In her right he possessed a great fortune. He became sheriff of London in 1575; and lord mayor in 1583. I have seen the picture of his master at Kiveton, the seat of the duke of Leeds, a half-length on board: his dress is a black gown furred, a red vest and sleeve, a gold chain, and a bonnet. He served the office of lord mayor in 1559; and died in 1566. Strype mistakes, when he says, that Sir William died in 1599, and was buried in the cathedral of St. Paul: another person of the same name lies there, under the handsome monument† ascribed by our old historian to the former.

OF the multitudes who have perished in this rapid descent, the name of no one, of any note, has reached my knowledge, except that of Mr. Temple, only son of the great Sir William Temple.

A SUICIDE. His end was dreadful, as it was premeditated. He had, a week before, accepted, from king William, the office of Secretary at War. On the 14th of April, 1689, he hired a boat on the Thames, and directed the waterman to shoot the bridge; at that instant he flung himself into the torrent, and, having filled his pockets with stones, to destroy all chance of safety,‡ instantly sunk. In the boat was found a note to this effect: "My folly, in "undertaking what I could not perform, whereby

 "some misfortunes have befallen the king's ser"vice, is the cause of putting myself to this sud"den end. I wish him success in all his underfather's reflection, on the occasion, was a parental apology, not his real sentiments: "That a wise great man militate against the precepts of Christianity, and the solid arguments of a most wise and pious heathen!*

VERY near to the northern end of the bridge, is the church of St. Magnus. It is probably of great antiquity; yet the first mention of it is in 1433. CHURCH OF

 It was consumed in the great fire, but within ten years was restored in its present handsome form.

stone, which, I am informed by a friend who used to frequent the old house when it was a tavern, was originally above the chimney-piece in the great eating-room. Notwithstanding the house is gone, we shall laugh at the humor of the jovial knight, his hostess, Bardolph, and Pistol, as long as the descriptive pages of our great dramatic writer exist in our entertained imagination. I must mention, that in the wall of another house is a Swan cut in stone; probably, in old times, the sign of another tavern.

THE renowned Henry, prince of Wales, was not the only one of the royal family, whose youthful blood led them into frolic and riot. His brothers, John, and Thomas, with their attendants, between two and three o'clock, after midnight, raised such an uproar, that the mayor and sheriffs thought proper to interfere. This the princes took as an insult on their dignity. The magistrates were convened by the celebrated chief justice Gascoigne; they stood on their defence, and were most honorably dismissed, it being proved that they did no more than their duty, towards the maintenance of the peace.*

THIS street was famous, in old times, for its convivial doings; "The cookes cried hot ribbes of and a prejudice for the antient sites. It was difficult to persuade people to relinquish, for a mere work of taste, a spot productive of thousands, to them or their predecessors. These things considered, it is not to be wondered that we are left to admire, on paper only, the vast designs of this great architect. But still he was the restorer of several of our public buildings: many of our temples arose with improved beauty from his plans; and several other buildings, which we have had, or shall have occasion to mention.

THE MONU-MENT.

THAT astonishing proof of his genius, the Monument, is placed on the side of Fish-street, very near to the spot where the calamity began:

Where London's column, pointing at the skies,
Like a tall bully lifts its head and lyes.

It is a Doric column, two hundred and two feet high, fluted, and finished with a trifling urn with flames, instead of a noble statue of the reigning king, as the great architect proposed.* On the cap of the pedestal, at the angles, are four dragons, the supporters of the city arms: these cost two hundred pounds, and were the work of Edward Pierce, jun. On the west side of the pedestal is a bas relief, cut by Gabriel Cibber, in admirable taste. It represents emblematically this sad catastrophe; Charles is seen, surrounded with Liberty, Genius, and Science, giving directions for restoring the city. Here the sculptor found, luckily, one example to compliment the attention of the thoughtless monarch towards the good of his subjects; for, during the horrors of the conflagration, and after it was subdued, his endeavours to stop the evil, and to remedy its consequences, were truly indefatigable. The king was seriously affected by this calamity, and many emotions of piety and devotion were excited in him. There was, for a short time, great reason to expect the fruits of this his brief return to Heaven: but they were quickly blasted by the uncommon wickedness of the people about him, who, by every profane witticism on the recent calamity, and even by suggesting that it was the blessing of God, to humble this rebellious city, and to prepare it for his yoke, soon removed every good thought from the royal breast.* This noble column was begun in 1671; and finished in 1677, at the expence of 14,500*l*. A melancholy period of party rage! and the injurious inscription, written by doctor Thomas Gale, afterwards dean of York, was permitted. The damage sustained by the cruel element, was computed at ten millions seven hundred and sixteen thousand pounds. But

BENEFIT RESULTING FROM THE FIRE.

Providence, mingling mercy with justice, suffered only the loss of a very few lives, the number being estimated at eight only.

GREAT as this calamity was, yet it proved the providential cause of putting a stop to one of a far more tremendous nature. The plague, which, for a series of ages, had, with very short intervals, visited our capital in its most dreadful forms, never appeared there again after the rebuilding of the city in a more open and airy manner; the removal of several nuisances, which, if not the actual origin of a plague, supplied assuredly one great pabulum, when it had seized our streets. The last was in the year 1665, when in about six months, by the lowest computation, made by the earl of Clarendon (who thought it much under-rated), a hundred and threescore thousand people fell by the destroying angel: his lordship instances a mistake in one of the weekly bills, which was reported with only six thousand deaths: yet the amount of that week was fourteen thousand.* Notwithstanding this, doctor Hodges, in his book De Peste, collects from the bills of mortality, that the sum of the dead, who fell by the pestilence, was not more than sixty-eight thousand five hundred and ninety-six.

sad calamity, heroes that might vie in piety with that worthy prelate. Sir JOHN LAURENCE, lord mayor in the year of the plague, shewed equal intrepidity, humanity, and charity. Fear of the disease seemed to have steeled the hearts of men; for, as soon as its nature was certainly known, above forty thousand servants were turned into the streets to perish: no one would receive them into their houses; and the villagers near London drove them away with pitch-forks, and fire-arms.* Sir JOHN LAURENCE took these wretched fugitives under his protection, relieved them with his own fortune as long as that lasted, and then by subscriptions which he solicited from all parts. The king contributed a thousand pounds a week: in the whole, the vast sum of a hundred thousand pounds was weekly distributed.†

LAURENCE.

THE heroism of George Monk, duke of Albemarle, and of William earl Craven, must not pass unnoticed; their virtue forbid them to absent themselves in this dire season. They, in conjunction with the civil magistrate, took every means to alleviate the calamity, and to prevent its progress: here their valour was put to the test; and amidst the horrors of death, which no wisdom could avert, they behaved with the same coolness as when they were supported by the glory of victory, amidst the thunder of artillery, and flights of bullets. He continued at Lambeth during the whole contagion : preserving, by his charities, multitudes who were sinking under the pressure of disease and want; and, by his pathetic letters to his suffragans, procured from their dioceses benevolences to a vast amount.

ALMOST opposite to the place where the Monument now stands, was a large stone house, the habitation of Edward, our famous black prince, the flower of English chivalry. In Stow's time it was altered to a common hosterie or inn, having a black bell for the sign.*

FISHMONGERS-HALL.

AT a small distance, to the west of the bridge, is Fishmongers-hall, a very handsome building, erected since the destruction of the old hall by the great fire. It faces the river, and commands a fine view of the water and the bridge. In the court-room are several pictures of the various sorts of vendible fishes. A printed catalogue of the species and varieties, with their seasons, was presented to me when I visited the place.

IN the great hall is a wooden statue of the brave Sir William Watworth, armed with his rebel-killing dagger; here is also another of St. Peter: the former was of this company; the latter with great propriety is adopted as its tutelar saint. The arms of the benefactors are beautifully emblazoned in painted glass on the several windows.

THIS is one of the twelve great companies: it originally was divided into Stock-mongers and Salt-fish-mongers; the former were incorporated in 1433; a period in which we had very considerable trade with Iceland in that very article: * the latter not till 1509, but were united in 1536. There was once a desperate feud between this company and the Goldsmiths, about precedence. The parties grew so violent, that the mayor and aldermen, by their own authority, were obliged to pronounce them rebels, and even bannifati, banishing the city such of them as persisted in their contumacy. † I fear that, in old times, the Goldsmiths were a pugnacious society; for I read of a desperate battle, in 1269, between them and the Taylors. This company pays 800*l.* a year to charitable uses.

THE next place I shall take notice of, to the west of this hall, is Cold Harbour, mentioned as a tenement as early as the reign of Edward II. A magnificent house was, in after-times, built on the spot, which, from its occupant, Sir John Poultney, four times mayor of London, was, in the style of the times, called Poultney-Inn: for the town habitations of most of the great men were called Inns. Warwick-Inn was the palace of the great king-maker, and many others had the same addition. In feudal days the town had no pleasures to attract the great; they seldom came there but to support a cause (as now and then is the case with a modern senator), to make or unmake a king, or lay the foundation of civil broils. In 1397, it was the Inn of John Holland, duke of Exeter, and earl of Huntingdon, who here gave a dinner, and doubtlessly a very magnificent one, to his half-brother Richard II. Next year it became the inn of Edmund of Langley, earl of Cambridge, but still retained the addition of Poultney. In 1410, Henry IV. granted this house to his son Henry prince of Wales, by the title of quoddam hospitium sive placeam (vocatum le Coldecherbergh), for the term of his life. And in the same year (to stock his cellars) gives him an order on the collector of the customs for twenty casks and one pipe of red wine of Gascony, and that without the payment of any duty. In 1472, Henry Holland, duke of Exeter, lodged in it. In 1485, Richard III. granted it to Garter king of arms, and his brother heralds. In the time of Henry VIII. it was given to Tonstal, bishop of Durham, in lieu of Durham-place. On his deposal it was granted to the earl of Shrewsbury, by Edward VI.; and changed its name to that of Shrewsbury-house.

STEEL-YARD. To the west of this place was the Steel-yard, a most noted quay for the landing of wheat, rye, and other grain; cables, masts, tar, flax, hemp, linen cloth, wainscot, wax, steel, and other merchandize, imported by the Easterlings, or Germans. Here was the Guildhalda Teutonicorum, or Guildhall of those people. They were our masters in the art of commerce, and settled here even before the eleventh century. We find them in the year 979, at least in the time of king Ethelred: for the Emperor's men, i. e. the Germans of the Steel-yard, coming with their ships, were accounted worthy of good laws. They were not to forestall the market from the burghers of London; and to pay toll, at Christmas, two grey cloths, and one brown one, with ten pounds of pepper, five pair of gloves, two vessels of vinegar; and as many at Easter. The name of this wharf is not taken from Steel the metal, which was only a single article, but from Stael-hoff, contracted from Stapel-hoff, or the general house of trade of the German nation. The powerful league of the Hanse Towns, and the profits we made of their trade (for they were for a long season the principal importers of this kingdom) procured them great privileges. They had an alderman of London for their judge; in case of disputes; and they were to be free from all subsidies to the king, or his heirs; saving, says the king, to us and our heirs, our antient prizes, prisis juribusque consuetudinibus costumisque.* In return for these distinguishing favors, they were to keep in repair the gate called Bishopsgate. In 1282, they were called on to perform their duty, the gate being at that time in a ruinous state; they refused; but being compelled by law, Gerard Marbod, their alderman, advanced the necessary sum. In 1479, it was even rebuilt in a most magnificent manner, by the merchants of the Steel-yard. As they decreased in strength, and we grew more powerful and more politic, we began to abridge their privileges. We found that this potent company, by their weight, interfered with the interest of the natives, and damped their spirit of trade. After several revocations and renewals of their charter, the house, in 1597, was shut up, by our wise and patriotic queen, and the German inhabitants were expelled the kingdom.

At this time it is the great repository of imported iron, whence our metropolis is supplied with that necessary material. The quantity of bars, that fill the yards and warehouses of this quarter, strikes with astonishment the most indifferent beholder. Next to the water-side are two eagles, with imperial crowns round their necks, placed on two columns.

TRIUMPHS OF RICHES AND POVERTY.

IN the hall of this company were the two famous pictures, painted in distemper by Holbein, representing the triumphs of Riches and Poverty. They were lost, being supposed to have been carried into Flanders, on the destruction of the company, and from thence into France. I am ignorant where they are at present, unless in the cabinet of M. Fleischman, at Hesse-Darmstadt. The celebrated Christian a Mechel, of Basil, has lately published two engravings of these pictures, either from the originals, or the drawings by Zuccherò; for Frid. Zuccherò, 1574, is at one corner of each print. Drawings of these pictures were found in England, by Vertue, ascribed to Holbein; and the verses over them to Sir Thomas More.* It appears that Zuccherò copied them at the Steel-yard,† so probably those copies, in process of time, might have fallen into the hands of M. Fleischman.

IN the triumph of Riches, Plutus is represented in a golden car, and Fortune sitting before him, flinging money into the laps of people, holding up their garments to receive her favors: Ventidius is written under one; Gadareus under another; and Themistocles under a man kneeling beside the car: Cræsus, Midas, and Tantalus follow; Narcissus holds the horse of the first: over their heads, in the clouds, is Nemesis. There are various allegorical figures, which I shall not attempt to explain. By the sides of the horses walk dropsical and other diseased figures, the too frequent attendants of riches.

* Mr. Walpole's Anecdotes, i. 83.

† The same, p. 83, 142.

POVERTY appears in another car, mean and shattered, half naked, squalid, and meagre. Behind her sits Misfortune: before her Memory, Experience, Industry, and Hope. The car is drawn by a pair of oxen, and a pair of asses; Diligence drives the ass; and Solicitude, with a face of care, goads the ox. By the sides of the car walks Labor, represented by lusty workmen with their tools, with chearful looks; and behind them Misery, and Beggary, in ragged weeds, and with countenances replete with wretchedness and discontent.

NOT remote from hence formerly stood the
 THE ERBER. Erber, a vast house or palace. Edward III. for it is not traced higher, granted it to one of the noble family of the Scroopes; from them it fell to the Nevilles. Richard, the great earl of Warwick, possessed it, and lodged here his father, the earl of Salisbury, with five hundred men, in the famous congress of barons, in the year 1458, in which Henry VI. may be said to have been virtually deposed. It often changed masters: Richard III. repaired it, in whose time it was called the King's Palace. It was rebuilt by Sir Thomas Pullison, mayor, in 1584; and afterwards dignified by being the residence of our illustrious navigator Sir Francis Drake.

DOWGATE. BEYOND the Steel-yards is Dowgate, now a place of little note. Here stood one of the Roman gates, through which was the way for passengers, who took boat at the trajectus, or ferry, into the continuation of the military way towards Dover. The Britons are supposed to have given it the name of Dwr or Dwy, water; and the Saxons added the word Gate, which signifies way. It became a noted wharf, and was called the port of Downgate. In the time of Henry III. and Edward III. customs were to be paid by ships resting there, in the same manner as if they rode at Queenhithe.

NEAR Dowgate runs concealed into the Thames the antient Wal-brook, or river of Wells, mentioned in a charter of the Conqueror to the college of St. Martin le Grand. It rises to the north of Moorfields, and passed through London Wall, between Bishopsgate and Moorgate, and ran through the city; for a long time it was quite exposed, and had over it several bridges, which were maintained by the priors of certain religious houses, and others. Between two and three centuries ago it was vaulted over with brick;* the top paved, and formed into a street; and, for a long time past, known only by name.

THE Three Cranes, in the Vintry, was the next wharf, which, in old times, by royal order, was allotted for the landing of wines, as the name im-

In the adjacent lane was the Painted Tavern, famous as early as the time of Richard II. In this neighborhood was the great house called the Vintrie, with vast wine-vaults beneath. Here, in 1314, resided Sir John Gisors, lord mayor, and constable of the Tower. But the memorable feasting of another owner, Sir Henry Picard, vintner, lord mayor in 1356, must not be forgotten, who, VINTNERS-HALL faces Thames-street. It is distinguished by the figure of Bacchus striding his tun, placed on the columns of the gate. In the great hall is a good picture of St. Martin, on a white horse, dividing his cloak with our Saviour, who appeared to him in the year 337, in the character of a beggar.

VINTNERS-
HALL.

Hic CHRISTO chlamydem Martinus dimidiavit;
 Ut faciamus idem nobis exemplificavit.

There is, besides, a statue of that saint in the same room; and another picture of him above stairs. Why this saint was selected as patron of the company I know not, except it was imagined that, actuated by good wine, he had been inspired with good thoughts; which, according to the argument of James Howel, producing good works, brought a man to heaven. And, to show the moral in a contrary effect, here is a picture of Lot and his incestuous daughters, exemplifying the danger of the abuse of the best things.

* Stow's Annals, 263.

THIS hall was built on ground given by Sir John Stodie, vintner, lord mayor in 1357. It was called the manour of the Vintre. The Vintners, or Vintonners, were incorporated in the reign of Edward III. They were originally divided into Vinetarii et Tabernarii; Vintners who imported the wine, and Taverners who kept taverns, and retailed it for the former. This company flourished so much, that, from its institution till the year 1711, it produced not fewer than fourteen lord mayors, many of which were the keepers of taverns. Yet, in the time of Edward III. the Gascoigne wines were not sold at the rate of above 4*d.* a gallon; nor the Rhenish above 6*d.* In 1379, red wine was 4*d.* a gallon; and a little after, the price of a tun 4*l.* As late as the year 1552, the Guienne and Gascoigne wines were sold at 8*d.* a gallon; and no wines were to exceed the price of 12*d.* To restrain luxury, it was at the same time enacted, that no person, except those who could expend 100 marks annually, or was worth 1000 marks, or was the son of a duke, marquis, earl, viscount, or baron of the realm, should keep in his house any vessel of wine, for his family use, exceeding ten gallons, under penalty of ten pounds.

OUR great wine trade was at first with Bordeaux, and the neighboring provinces; it commenced as early as the Conquest, perhaps sooner.*

* Camden, i. 672.

But it became very considerable in the reign of Henry II. by reason of his marriage with Eleanor, daughter of the duke of Aquitaine; our conquest of that, and other great wine-provinces of France, increased the trade to a high degree, and created great fortunes among the adventurers of this company. In after-times, when sweet wines came into fashion, we had considerable intercourse with the Canary islands.

I MUST not be silent about the celebrated Sir SIR RICHARD WHITTINGTON. Richard Whittington, three times lord mayor of London, in 1397, 1406, and 1419. I shall leave the history of his cat to the friend of my younger days, Punch, and his dramatical troop. But will not omit saying, that his good fortune was not without parallel; for it is recorded, “how Alphonso, a Portuguese, being wrecked on the coast of Guinney, and being presented by the king thereof with his weight in gold for a Cat, to kill their mice, and an oyntment to kill their flies, which he improved, within five years, to 6000*l.* on the place, and returning to Portugal, after 15 years traffick, becoming the third man in the kingdom.”*

OUR munificent citizen founded, near this place, Whittington College, in the church of St. Michael Royal, rebuilt by him, and finished by his executors in 1424. The college was dedicated to the Holy Ghost, and the Virgin Mary, and had in it an establishment of a master and four fellows, clerks, choristers, &c. ; and near it an almshouse for thirteen poor people. The college was suppressed at the Reformation, but the almshouses still exist.*

THIS great man was thrice buried: once by his executors, under a magnificent monument, in the church which he had built; but by the sacrilege of Thomas Mountein, rector, in the reign of Edward VI. who expected great riches in his tomb, it was broken open, and the body spoiled of its leaden sheet, and then a second time committed to its place.† In the next reign the body was again taken up, to renew a decent covering, and deposited the third time. His epitaph began thus:

Ut fragrans nardus, fama fuit iste Ricardus,
Albificens villam qui justè rexerat illam,
 Flos mercatorum, fundator Presbyterorum, &c.‡

 ROYAL.

THE Tower Royal, which stood in a street of the same name, a little beyond this church, must not pass unnoticed. It was supposed to have been founded by Henry I.; and, according to Stow, it was the residence of king Stephen. Whether it was destroyed by any accident does not appear : but in the reign of Edward I. it was no more than a simple tenement, held by one Simon Beaumes. In that of Edward III. it acquired the title of Royal, and the Inn Royal, as having been the residence of the king : under that name he bestowed it on the college of St. Stephen, Westminster ; but it reverted to the crown, and in the time of Richard II. was called the Reol, or the Queen's Wardrobe.* It must have been a place of great strength ; for, when the rebels, under Wat Tyler, had made themselves masters of THE TOWER, and forced from thence the archbishop of Canterbury, and every other victim to their barbarity, this place remained secure. Hither the princess Joan, the royal mother, retired during the time the rebels were committing every excess in all parts of the town ; and here the youthful monarch found her, after he had, by his wonderful calmness and prudence, put an end to this pestilential insurrection.†

IN this tower Richard, in 1386, lodged, when his royal guest Leon III. king of Armenia, or, as Holinshed ‡ calls him, Lyon king of Armomy (Armenia), who had been expelled his kingdom by the Turks, took refuge in England. Richard treated him with the utmost munificence, loaded him with gifts, and settled on the unfortunate prince a thousand pounds a year for life. After two months stay, he returned into France, where he also met with a reception suitable to his rank;* and dying at Paris, in 1393, was interred in the Celestins, where his tomb is to be seen to this day.†

JOHN duke of Norfolk, the faithful adherent of the usurper Richard III. had a grant of this tower from his master, and made it his residence.‡ In queen Elizabeth's time it was turned into tenements and stables.

NEAR the water-side, a little to the west of WORCESTER-PLACE. Vintners-hall, stood Worcester-place, the house of the accomplished John Tiptoft, earl of Worcester, lord high treasurer of England.§ All his love for the sciences could not soften in him the ferocious temper of the unhappy times he lived in. While he was in Ireland, he cruelly destroyed two infants of the Desmond family. And, in 1470, sitting in judgment on twenty gentlemen and yeomen, taken at sea near Southampton, he caused them to be hanged and beheaded, then hung up by their legs, and their heads stuck on a stake driven into their fundaments. He had deserted the cause of Henry, and was beheaded by order of the great earl of Warwick, who had just before thought proper to quit that of Edward.

§ Royal and Noble Authors, i. 59.

The next place of antiquity, on the banks of the Thames, is Queen-hithe, or harbour : its original name was Edred's-hithe, and it possibly existed in the time of the Saxons. This was one of the places for large boats, and even ships, to discharge their lading ; for there was a draw-bridge in one part of London-bridge, which was pulled up, occasionally, to admit the passage of large vessels ; express care being taken to land corn, fish, and provisions, in different places, for the conveniency of the inhabitants ; and other hithes were appointed for the landing of different merchandise, in order that business might be carried on with regularity. When this hithe fell into the hands of king Stephen, he bestowed it on William de Ypres, who, in his piety, again gave it to the convent of the Holy Trinity, within Aldgate. It again fell to the crown, in the time of Henry III. and then acquired its present name, being called Ripa Regina, the Queen's Wharf. That monarch compelled the ships of the Cinque Ports to bring their corn here, and to no other place. It probably was part of her majesty's pin-money, by the attention paid to her interest in the affair.

WHEN I visited this dock, I saw a melancholy proof of the injury trade may sustain by the ruinous state of Blackfriars-bridge, the result of the bad materials of which part of it has been unhappily composed. A large stone had fallen out of its place. A vast barge deeply laden, I think, with corn and malt, struck on this sunk rock, and foundered. It was weighed up, and brought into this place to discharge its damaged cargo.

A LITTLE to the north-west of Queen-hithe, on Old Fish-street-hill, stood the inn or town residence of the lords of Mont-hault, or Mold, in Flintshire. The present church, named from them St. Mary Mounthaw, had been their chapel. In 1234, the bishop of Hereford purchased it, and it became his inn, and so continued till 1553, when it was granted to Edward Clinton, earl of Lincoln. In this parish was also the house of Robert Beknap, one of the judges who was banished by the turbulent lords in the time of Richard II; when it became forfeited, and was granted to William of Wickham, bishop of Winchester.

I CANNOT ascertain the place, but in Thames-street, somewhere to the north-east of St. Paul's wharf, stood Beaumont-Inn, or house, the residence of the noble family of that name. Edward IV. in 1465, presented it to his favorite, the lord Hastings. On the advancement of his grandson to the earldom of Huntingdon, it was named after the title of the noble possessors.

IN this neighborhood, near Trig-stairs, the abbot of Chertsey had his inn, or city mansion: it was afterwards called Sandys-house, because it became the residence of the lord Sandys.

NEAR Broken Wharf, (between Trig-stairs and Queen-hithe) was an antient and large building of stone, with arched gates, the residence of Hugh de Bigot, earl of Norfolk, in the time of Henry III. In 1316, it was possessed by Thomas Brotherton, duke of Norfolk, and earl-marshal; and in 1432, by John Moubray, also duke of Norfolk. But in the reign of queen Elizabeth it was much more honored, by being the mansion of that opulent and charitable citizen Thomas Sutton, founder of the Charter-house hospital, and author of numberless other good deeds.

OPPOSITE to Queen-hithe, on the south side of Thames-street, is Little Trinity-lane, where the company of Painter-stainers have their hall. These artists formed themselves into a fraternity as early as the reign of Edward III. and also erected themselves into a company; but were not incorporated. They styled themselves Painter-stainers; the chief work being the staining or painting of glass, illuminating missals, or painting of portative or other altars, and now and then a portrait; witness that of Richard II. and those of the great John Talbot and his wife, preserved at Castle Ashby.* In the year 1575, they found that plaisterers, and all sorts of unskilful persons, intermeddled in their business, and brought their art into disrepute by the badness and slightness of their work. They determined (like the surgeons in later days) to keep their mystery pure from all pretenders. They were incorporated in 1576, had their master, warden, and common seal: George Gower was queen Elizabeth's serjeant painter;* but, as I do not find his name in Mr. Walpole's Anecdotes, I suspect his art was confined to the humbler part. This corporation extended only to such artists as practised within the city. As art is unconfined, numbers arose in different parts, and settled in Westminster, the seat of the court. They for a long time remained totally unconnected even with each other. About the year 1576, they solicited and received the royal patronage, and were incorporated under the title of master, wardens, and commonalty of Painter-stainers. The majority are independent of any other body corporate; but several among them are regular freemen of the city under the antient company.

NUMBERS of paintings are preserved here: many of them probably by the members of the society. The portraits of Charles II. and his queen, by Houseman; architecture of the Corinthian order, by Trevit; the fire of London, by Waggoner; a landscape, by Aggas; Heraclitus and Democritus, by Penn; fish and fowl, by Robinson; birds, by Barlow; fruit and flowers, by Everbrook; a ruin, by Greffier; and Monamy contributed a fine piece of shipping. On the ceiling is an allegorical painting, the work of Fuller. The silver cup and cover, given to this society by the great Camden, who was son of a painter in the Old Bailey, is preserved here, and annually produced on St. Luke's day, the old master drinking out of it to the new one, then elected.

THE next remarkable place is Baynard Castle, one of the two castles built on the west end of the town, "with walls and ramparts," mentioned by Fitzstephens. It took its name from its founder, a nobleman and follower of the Conqueror, and who died in the reign of William Rufus. It was forfeited to the crown in 1111, by one of his descendants. Henry I. bestowed it on Robert Fitz-Richard, fifth son of Richard de Tonebrugge, son of Gilbert earl of Clare.* To this family did appertain, in right of the castle, the office of castilian, and banner-bearer of the city of London. There is a curious declaration of their rights, in the person of Robert Fitzwalter, one of his descendants, expressing his duty in time of war, made in all the fullness of chivalry, in 1203, before John Blondon, then lord mayor. It is there recited, that "The sayd Robert, and his heyres,

 " ought to give them to the bayliffes of the towne,
 " or to whom he wil, by the counsaile of the " maior of the citie."

BAYNARD
 BURNED AND REBUILT.

IN 1428, the old castle was burnt: it probably at that time had changed masters, for it was rebuilt by Humphrey duke of Gloucester. On his death it was granted, by Henry VI. to Richard duke of York. In the important convention of the great men of the kingdom, in 1458, the prelude to the bloody civil broils, Richard lodged here with his train of four hundred men; and all his noble partizans had their warlike suits.

BUT Baynard Castle was the scene of a still more important action; in 1460, the youthful Ed- ward assumed the name and dignity of king, confirmed by a number of persons of rank assembled in this place, after it had been conferred on him by a mixed and tumultuary multitude.

THE usurper Richard in the very same castle took on him the title of king. Here he was waited on by his creature Buckingham, the mayor, and such of the citizens as had been prepared for the purpose of forcing the crown on the seemingly reluctant hypocrite. SHAKESPEARE has made an admirable scene out of this part of our history.* His successor repaired, or perhaps rebuilt, Baynard Castle; and, as if foreseeing a long series of peaceful years, changed its form into that of a palace for quiet times.† According to the view of it which I have seen, it included a square court, with an octagonal tower in the center, and two in the front; between which were several square projections from top to bottom, with the windows in pairs one above the other; beneath was a bridge and stairs to the river.

HENRY VII. often resided here, and from hence made several of his solemn processions. Here, in 1505, he lodged Philip of Austria, the matrimonial king of Castile, tempest-driven into his dominions, and shewed him the pomp and glory of his capital.‡

THIS castle was the residence of Sir William Sydney, who died chamberlain and steward to

TOWER OF MONTFICHET.

Edward VI. In this place Mary, the gloomy queen of Philip II. of Spain, had her right to the throne resolved on; and from hence her partizans sallied forth to proclame her lawful title. It was then the property and residence of William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, a particular favorer of the rightful heir. Her successor, Elizabeth, did his lordship the honor of supping with him: after supper, her majesty went on the water to shew herself to her subjects; her barge was instantly surrounded by hundreds of boats; loud acclamations delivered from the heart, music, and fireworks testified the happiness they felt at the sight of this mother of her people. Early hours were then the fashion, for, notwithstanding this scene was exhibited on the 25th of April, she retired to her palace at 10 o'clock.* The family of the earls of Shrewsbury resided in the castle till it was burnt in the great fire.

TOWER OF MONTFI-
CHET.

To the west of this stood the other of Fitzstephen's castles, the tower of Montfichet, founded by Gilbert de Montfichet, a native of Rome, but related to the Conqueror: he brought with him a strong force, and fought gallantly in his cause, in the field of Hastings.† Its date was short, for it was demolished by king John in 1213, after banishing Richard, successor to Gilbert, the actual owner.* The materials were applied in 1276 (as before related) towards building the monastery of the Black Friars.

A LITTLE farther is Puddle Dock, and Puddle Dock Hill, remarkable only for having in the latter the western termination of the long street called Thames-street, which extends eastward as far as the Tower, a mile in length. In early times, the southern side was guarded by a wall, close to the river, strengthened with towers. These are mentioned by Fitzstephens as having been ruined and undermined by the river. Lord Lyttelton justly observes, that after the building of the Tower and the bridge, there was no necessity of restoring these fortifications; as it was impossible (at lest after the bridge was flung across the Thames) for any fleet to annoy the city. The wall originally stood farther from the river than the present buildings and wharfs, a considerable space between the street and the water having been gained in a long series of ages.

NOT far from Puddle Dock, in old times, stood an antient house of stone and timber, built by the lords of Berkeley, a potent race of barons. In the reign of Henry VI. it was the residence of the great Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick,† who seems to have made himself master of this by violence, among other estates of the Berkelies, to which he made pretensions on the death of Thomas fourth lord Berkeley.*

FROM hence I turn north till I arrive at the site of Ludgate. In front are the magnificent structure of St. Paul's, and its confined churchyard. To the north all is piety. Ave-Maria-lane, Pater-noster-row, and Amen Corner, indicate the sanctity of the motley inhabitants. And on the south side, we may find Credo-lane, Sermon-lane, and Godly-man-street. Before I mention that noble cathedral, I pursue the left hand way to Warwick-lane ;

COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS.

Where stands a dome majestic to the sight,
And sumptuous arches bear its oval height ;
A golden globe, plac'd high with artful skill,
Seems to the distant sight a gilded pill.

In prose, the College of Physicians ; a society founded originally by Doctor Linacre, the first who rescued the medical art from the hands of illiterate monks and empirics. The college was first in Knight-rider-street ; afterward it was removed to Amen Corner ; and finally fixed here. The present building was the work of Sir Christopher Wren. On the top of the dome is a gilt ball, which the witty Garth calls the gilded pill. On the summit of the centre is the bird of Æsculapius, the admonishing cock.

* Dugdale's Baron. i. 368.

ON one side of the court is a statue of Charles II: on the opposite, that of the notorious Sir John Cutler. I was greatly at a loss to learn how so much respect was shewn to a character so stigmatized for avarice. I think myself much indebted to Doctor WARREN for the extraordinary history. It appears, by the annals of the college, that in the year 1674, a considerable sum of money had been subscribed by the fellows, for the erection of a new college, the old one having been consumed in the great fire, eight years before. It also appears, that Sir John Cutler, a near relation of Doctor Whistler, the president, was desirous of becoming a benefactor. A committee was appointed to wait upon Sir John, to thank him for his kind intentions. He accepted their thanks, renewed his promise, and specified the part of the building of which he intended to bear the expence. In the year 1680, statues in honor of the king, and Sir John, were voted by the members: and nine years afterward, the college being then completed, it was resolved to borrow money of Sir John Cutler, to discharge the college debt, but the sum is not specified. It appears, however, that in 1699, Sir John's executors made a demand on the college of 7000*l.*; which sum was supposed to include the money actually lent, the money pretended to be given, but set down as a debt in Sir John's books, and the interest on both. Lord Radnor, however, and Mr. Boulter, Sir John Cutler's executors, were prevailed upon to accept 2000*l.* from the college, and actually remitted the other five. So that Sir John's promise, which he never performed, obtained him the statue, and the liberality of his executors has kept it in its place ever since. But the college wisely have obliterated the inscription, which, in the warmth of its gratitude, it had placed beneath the figure :

OMNIS CUTLERI CEDAT LABOR AMPHITHEATRO.

PORTRAITS. IN the great room are several portraits of gentlemen of the faculty. Among them Sir Theodore Mayerne, a native of Geneva, physician to James and Charles I. The great Sydenham, to whom thousands owe their lives, by his daring attempt (too long neglected) of the cool regimen in the small-pox. Harvey, who first discovered the circulation of the blood. And the learned and pious Sir Thomas Brown, who said that the discovery of that great man's was preferable to the discovery of the New World.

SIR EDMUND KING.

SIR Edmund King, a favorite of Charles II. When that monarch was first struck with the apoplexy, he had the courage to relieve his majesty by instant bleeding ; putting the rigour of the law to defiance in case of failure of success. A thousand pounds was ordered as a reward, but never paid.* He was among the philosophers of his time, who made the famous experiment of transfusing the blood of one animal into another. The blood of a healthy young spaniel was conveyed into the veins of an old mangy dog, who was perfectly cured in less than a fortnight.† The blood of a young dog was transfused into one almost blind with age, and which, before, could scarcely move: the latter did in two hours leap and frisk; and yet the young dog, which received in return the blood of the old or distempered, felt no sort of injury.‡ Would that the same experiment could be extended to the human species! and, should the change be effected on mind as well as body, how unspeakable would be the benefit to the whole race! Not only every loathsome disorder would be done away, but every folly, meanness, and vice, changed to their opposite virtues, by a due transfusion of worthy plebeian blood: and, what would make the experiment more beautiful, not the least inconvenience in body or mind would result to the generous lender of the uncontaminated fluid.

Venice; after that, was for some time physician to Charles V. Disgusted with the manners of a court, he determined on a voyage to the Holy Land. The republic of Venice sent to him to fill the professorship of medicine at Padua, vacant by the death of Fallopious. On his return, in 1564, he was shipwrecked on the isle of Zante, where he perished by hunger.

DOCTOR Goodal, the Stentor of Garth's Dispensary. Doctor Millington, whom the witty author compliments with the following lines, and, from what I understand, with great justice :

Machaon, whose experience we adore,
Great as your matchless merit is your power :
At your approach the baffled tyrant Death
Breaks his keen shafts, and grinds his clashing teeth.

THE portrait of Doctor Freind, the historian of physic, and the most able in his profession, and the most elegant writer of his time, must not be omitted. The fine busts of Harvey, Sydenham, and Mead, the physician of our own days, merit attention : and with them I close the distinguished list.

THE library was furnished with books by Sir Theodore Mayerne. And it received a considerable addition from the marquis of Dorchester.

MR. GEORGE
EDWARDS.

I REFLECT with pleasure on my frequent visits to Mr. George Edwards, the worthy librarian, and very able ornithologist. His works are so well known, and so justly esteemed, as to render any panegyric of mine superfluous. Notwithstanding we were both of a trade, we lived in the most perfect harmony. I esteem his present to me, not long before his death, of several of his original drawings in Indian ink, a most valuable part of my collection, as well as a proof of the friendship of a truly honest man.*

WARWICK-LANE took its name from its having in it the inn or house of the Beauchamps earls of Warwick. Cecily, countess of Warwick lived in it the 28th of Henry VI. It afterward fell to Richard Neville, the famous king-making earl, whose popularity and manner of living merit recital. Stow mentions his coming to London, in the famous convention of 1458, "with 600
" men, all in red jackets imbrodered, with ragged
" staves, before and behind, and was lodged in " Warwicke-lane: in whose house there was often
" six oxen eaten at a breakfast, and every taverne
" was full of his meate; for hee that had any " acquaintance in that house, might have there
" so much of sodden and rost meate, as he could
" pricke and carry upon a long dagger."†

THIS house was often the scene of boundless hospitality; the instrument of his furious spirit and boundless ambition. This mighty peer, in all his castles, was supposed to feed annually thirty thousand men.

ON the front of a house in the upper end of the lane is placed a small neat statue of Guy earl of Warwick, renowned in the days of king Athelstan for killing the Danish giant Colbrand, and performing numbers of other exploits, the delight of my childish days. This statue is in miniature the same with that in the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, in Guy's-cliff near Warwick. The arms on the shield are chequè or and azur, a chevron erminè, which were his arms, afterward gold, by the Beauchamps earls of Warwick.*

BERGAVEN-
NY-HOUSE.

NOT far from hence, near Ave-Maria-lane, stood a great house of stone and wood, belonging, in old times, to John duke of Bretagne, and earl of Richmond, cotemporary with Edward II. and III; after him it was possessed by the earls of Pembroke, in the time of Richard II. and Henry VI. and was called Pembroke's inn, near Ludgate. It next came to William Beauchamp lord Abergavenny, and was called Bergavenny-house. In the 19th of Henry VI. it fell, in right of his wife, to Edmund Neville, lord Abergavenny; and in the time of queen Elizabeth, we find it possessed by Henry lord Aber- gavenny. To finish the anti-climax, it was finally possessed by the Company of Stationers, who rebuilt it of wood, and made it their hall. It was destroyed by the great fire; and was succeeded by the present plain building. The preceding owners might boast of their nobility; their successors of their wealth; for in that sad calamity, lord Clarendon estimated that the loss of the company did not amount to less than two hundred thousand pounds.

My munificent countryman John Boydell, late lord mayor of London, presented to this hall two good pictures, one of George Douglas assisting Mary Stuart in her escape from Lochleven Castle.
 The queen and the gallant Douglas, are represented by the painter, Mr. Graham, of exquisite beauty. The other is of Alfred dividing his loaf with a pilgrim, the work of Mr. West.

IN the stock room is a well-painted portrait of Tycho Wing, son of Vincent Wing, a celebrated astrologer and almanack-maker.

THERE is, besides, a bust of the celebrated printer William Bowyer, a man equally distinguished by his erudition and his probity: also a good portrait of his father, to whom he succeeded in business and reputation. The father died in December 1737, aged 74. The son in November 1777, aged 78. Both were patronized by the most respectable characters of the age. The father of whom was honored with the friendship of the pious Nelson, whose portrait is to be seen in this hall.*

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

THE cathedral of St. Paul more than fills the space of Ludgate-hill. The best authority we have for the origin of this church, is from its great restorer Sir CHRISTOPHER WREN. His opinion, that there had been a church on this spot, built by the Christians in the time of the Romans, was confirmed: when he searched for the foundations for his own design, he met with those of the original presbyterium, or semicircular chancel of the old church. They consisted only of Kentish rubble-stone, artfully worked, and consolidated with exceedingly hard mortar, in the Roman manner, much excelling the superstructure.† He explodes the notion of there having been here a temple of Diana, and the discovery of the horns of animals used in the sacrifices to that goddess, on which the opinion had been founded, no such having been discovered in all his researches.‡ What was found, is mentioned in the 13th page of this book.

THE first church is supposed to have been destroyed in the Dioclesian persecution, and to have been rebuilt in the reign of Constantine. This was again demolished by the pagan Saxons; and restored, in 603, by Sebert, a petty prince, ruling in these parts under Ethelbert king of Kent, the first Christian monarch of the Saxon race; who, at the instance of St. Augustin, appointed Melitus the first bishop of London. Erkenwald, the son of king Offa, fourth in succession from Melitus, ornamented his cathedral very highly, and improved the revenues with his own patrimony. He was most deservedly canonized; for the very litter in which he was carried in his last illness, continued many centuries to cure fevers by the touch; and the very chips, carried to the sick, restored them to health.

WHEN the city of London was destroyed by fire, in 1086, this church was burnt; the bishop Mauritius began to rebuild it, and laid the foundation, which remained till its second destruction, from the same cause, in the last century. Notwithstanding Mauritius lived twenty years after he had begun this pious work, and bishop Beaumes, or Belmeis, enjoyed the see twenty more, yet, such was the grandeur of the design, that it remained unfinished. The first had the ruins of the Palatine tower bestowed on him, as materials for the building: and Henry I. bestowed on the same prelate part of the ditch belonging to the Tower, which, with purchases made by himself, enabled him to inclose the whole with a wall. The same monarch granted besides, that every ship, which brought stone for the church, should be exempted from toll; he gave him also all the great fishes taken in his precincts, except the tongues; and lastly, he secured to him and his successor, the delicious tythes of all his venison in the county of Essex.

ST. FAITH'S. THE steeple was finished in 1221. The noble subterraneous church of St. Faith, Ecclesia Sanctæ Fidis in cryptis, was begun in 1257. It was supported by three rows of massy clustered pillars, with ribs diverging from them to support the solemn roof. This was the parish church. This undercroft, as buildings of this sort were called, had in it several chauntries and monuments. It extended, says Dugdale,* under part of the choir, and the structure eastward, and was supported by three rows of large and massy pillars: a print of it attends the description given by our great antiquary. No part is now left of this, or of any other antient crypt. A vast vault, supported by pillars, runs under the whole of St. Paul's, the work of its celebrated architect. Sir Christopher is interred in an obscure corner, beneath an ordinary flag, and on the wall above is the following inscription, written by his son:

* Hist. of St. Paul's, 119.

Subtus conditur,
 Hujus ecclesie et urbis conditor,
 CRISTOPHERUS WREN,
 Qui vixit annos ultra nonaginta,
 Non sibi sed bono publico.
 Lector, si monumentum requiris, CIRCUMSPICE.

It is to be lamented that this beautiful thought should be flung away in the most darksome nook of the whole fabrick. May we venture to suggest to the venerable Chapter the propriety with which the inscription might be placed beneath the center of the magnificent dome, on some elegant cenotaph directing the eye to the intended object?

HENRY LACIE, earl of Lincoln, who died in 1312, made what was called the New Work, at the east end of the church,* in which was the chapel of our Lady, and that of St. Dunstan. In the latter was the tomb of that great earl.

THE Chapter-house adjoining to the south transept, was circular, and supported by four central pillars, and of more elegant gothic than the rest of the building. This projected into a most beautiful cloister, two stories high. On the walls of a cloister on the north side of St. Paul's, called Pardon-church-haugh, was painted the Machabre, or dance of death, a common subject on the walls of cloisters or religious places. This was a single piece, a long train of all orders of men, from the pope to the lowest of human beings; each figure has as his partner, Death; the meagre spectre which leads the dance, shaking his remembering hour-glass.* Our old poet Lydgate, who flourished in the year 1430, translated a poem on the subject, from the French verses which attended a painting of the same kind, about St. Innocent's cloister, at Paris. The original verses were made by Machaber, a German, in his own language. This shews the antiquity of the subject, and the origin of the hint from which Holbein executed his famous painting at Basil.

THIS cloister, the dance, and innumerable fine monuments (for here were crowded by far the most superb) fell victims to the sacrilege of the protector Somerset, who demolished the whole, and carried the materials to his palace then erecting in the Strand.

LOLLARDS
TOWER.

FARTHER to the west, adjoining to this south side, was the parish church of St. Gregory. Over it was one of the towers which ornamented the western front. It was called the Lollards Tower, and was the bishop's prison for the heterodox, in which was committed many a midnight murder. That of Richard Hunn, in 1514, was one most foul; he was confined there; he was hanged there by the contrivance of the chancellor of the diocese,

* Dugdale's Monast. i. 367; in which both print and verses are preserved.—See Dugdale's St. Paul's, 134, and Stow's Survey, 616.

Horsey; he was scandalized with suicide; his corpse was ignominiously buried. The murder came out; the coroner's inquest sat on the ashes; and they brought in a verdict of wilful murder against Horsey and his accomplices. The bishop, Fitzjames, defended them. The king interfered, and ordered the murderers to make restitution to the children of the deceased, to the amount of fifteen hundred pounds. Yet the perpetrators of this villainy escaped with a pardon, notwithstanding the king, in his order, speaks to them as having committed what himself styles the cruel murder.*

THE last person confined here was Peter Burchet of the Temple, who, in 1573, desperately wounded the celebrated seaman Sir Richard Hawkins, in the open street, whom he had mistaken for Sir Christopher Hatton. He was committed to this prison; and afterward removed to the Tower; he there barbarously murdered† one of his keepers; was tried, convicted, had his right hand struck off, and then hanged. He was found to be a violent enthusiast, who thought it lawful to kill such as opposed the truth of the gospel.

THE style of the antient cathedral was a most beautiful gothic; over the east end was an elegant circular window; alterations were made in the ends of the two transepts ; so that their form is not delivered down to us in the antient plans ; from the central tower rose a lofty and most graceful spire.

DIMENSIONS OF THE
CHURCH.

THE dimensions of this noble temple, as taken in 1309, were : the length six hundred and ninety feet ; the breadth a hundred and twenty ; the height of the roof of the west part, from the floor, one hundred and two ; of the east part, a hundred and eighty-eight ; of the tower, two hundred and sixty ; of the spire, which was made of wood covered with lead, two hundred and seventy-four. The whole space the church occupied was three acres and a half, one rood and a half, and six perches.*

WE may be astonished at this amazing building, and naturally enquire what fund could supply money to support so vast an expence. But monarchs resigned their revenues resulting from the customs due for the materials, which were brought to the adjacent wharfs ; they furnished wood from the royal forests : prelates gave up much of their revenues : and, what was more than all, the pious bait of indulgences, and remissions of penance, brought in, from the good people of this realm, most amazing sums. Pope Innocent III. in 1252, gave a release of sixty days penance: the archbishop of Cologne gave, a few years before, a relaxation of fifty days: Boniface, archbishop of Canterbury, forty days. In brief, there was not a prelate who did not, in this manner, excite his flock to contribute liberally to this great and pious design.

THE nave was supported by clustered pillars and round arches, the style preserved by the Normans, after the conquered Saxons. The galleries and windows of the transepts were also finished with rounded arches. The skreen to the choir, and the chapel of our Lady, were gothic. The skreen remarkably elegant, ornamented with statues on each side of the door, at the expence of Sir Paul Pindar.^{*} We are obliged to the industry of Hollar, for preserving this knowledge of its ancient state. His great employer Sir William Dugdale, and that eminent artist, were fortunately coeval. The pen of the one, and the burin of the other, were vigorously employed, before the ravages of the great fire, on multitudes of the choice antiquities of our capital. To the same distinguished characters we owe our acquaintance with the tombs: but we are not to expect in this church the number, or the elegance, of those of Westminster. St. Peter, the porter of heaven, had far the preference to the tutelar saint of this cathedral. Few crowned heads crowded here:

the brother, father, and uncle of kings. He died in 1399; and had a most magnificent tomb erected over him, ruined by the fanatical soldiery of the last century. He, and his first wife Blanch, lay recumbent beneath a rich canopy of tabernacle work; his crest upon his abacof, or cap of state; his shield, and his mighty spear, were hung on his monument as so many trophies.

SHRINE OF ST. ERKENWALD.
Dugdale, 114.

In point of time, as well as sanctity, the rich gothic shrine of St. Erkenwald should have preceded; which rested on his plain altar tomb. No wonder if, on account of the miracles before mentioned, this shrine was a great resort of pious devotees. It was enriched with gold, silver, and precious stones, by the dean and chapter, who, in 1389, employed three goldsmiths to work on it a whole year; the wages of the most expert was only eight shillings a week, of the other two, five shillings. Of the gifts from devotees, that of Richard de Preston, of London, grocer, was most valuable, being his best sapphire stones^{} there to remain for curing of infirmities in the eyes.

THE shrine of Roger Niger, bishop of London in the thirteenth century, was also in high repute; a visit to it was frequently enjoined in the indulgences given for the rebuilding of this church.

SHRINE OF ROGER NI-
GER.
Dugdale, 86.

HENRY LACIE, the great earl of Lincoln, an eminent commander under Edward I. particularly in the Welsh wars, was buried in that part of the church of his own building, called the New Work. He died at his house in town, called Lincoln's-Inn. He was armed in mail; his body covered with a short gown; his legs crossed, for he had either the merit of visiting the Holy Land, or (which would entitle him to a right to that attitude) made a vow to perform that expiatory privilege.

EARL OF LIN-COLN.

SIR John Beauchamp, a younger son of Guy earl of Warwick, in 1360 was interred here. His figure lay armed, and recumbent. He was one of the founders of the order of the Garter; and distinguished himself, in the martial reign of Edward III. by numbers of gallant actions by sea and by land.

SIR JOHN
BEAUCHAMP.

THAT accomplished knight, the ill-fated Sir Simon de Burley, lay here in complete armour, under a most elegant gothic arch. I have mentioned his sad story at p. 394, so will not repeat it. Here was deposited, in 1468, (severed from her husband the great John Talbot, who was interred at Whitchurch, in Shropshire) Margaret countess of Shrewsbury. A monument was designed by the friendship of one John Wenlok, at the expence of a hundred pounds; but, from some unknown cause, the inscription only was executed.

Mary, Edward VI.* and Elizabeth, with his first countess Anne,* sister to Catherine Parre, queen to Henry VIII. who dying at Baynard Castle, in 1551, was interred here with vast solemnity. The portraits of Anne, and her lord, in painted glass, are still extant in the chapel at Wilton, and ought to be engraved.† The earl followed her in 1569. They lay beneath a magnificent canopy divided into two arches; at their head, kneeling, is their daughter Anne lady Talbot; at their feet, in the same attitude, their sons Henry earl of Pembroke, and Sir Edward Herbert, of Pool, i. e. Powis Castle, ancestor of the earls of Powis.

DEAN COLET.

Mercers, because his father had been of their company, and twice lord mayor. He was, in the beginning of life, luxurious, high-spirited, and subject to excess in mirth; and used a freedom of speech which he afterward corrected. He thought too much for the clergy of his days; and often exposed the corruptions of the church. This subjected him to persecution, but he escaped unhurt. At length he determined to retire from the world; which he quitted for a better in 1519. He dedicated his great fortune to the founding of the school of St. Paul's, in honor of Christ Jesu in pueritia, for a hundred and fifty-three scholars. A handsome house is built for this purpose, under the care of the Mercers Company. His monument had his bust in terra cotta, dressed in a gown and square cap; and beneath it, a skeleton laid on a mat rolled up under its head.

THAT great and honest man, Sir Nicholas Bacon, SIR NICHOLAS BACON. Dugdale, 71. lay here recumbent, and, notwithstanding he was a gownsman, was singularly clad in complete armour: beneath him were his two wives, in gowns and short ruffs.

SIR PHILIP SYDNEY, the delight of the age, SIR PHILIP SYDNEY. Dugdale, 109. the most heroic and virtuous character of his time, had no more than a board with a most wretched inscription of eight verses, to record a fame which nothing can injure. His remains were brought here on January 16, 1586, with the utmost magnificence. There was a general mourning for him, and it was accounted indecent, for many months, for any gentleman to appear at court, or in the city, in gay apparel.* The partiality of an individual may mistake the qualities of a friend; but the testimony of a whole nation puts his merits beyond dispute.

WALSING-HAM.
Dugdale, 99.

THE memory of the great Walsingham also rests on his own deserts. He died so poor, that his friends were obliged to deposit his remains by stealth into their grave, lest they should be arrested. By accident was left, in an old book of legends which I purchased, an antient manuscript list of statesmen in the reign of Elizabeth, consigned by the writer to the pains of hell, for their zeal against the Catholics. The 1st, Leicester, all in fire, died 1588: 2d, Walsingham, the Secretarie, also in fire and flames. He died, Ap. 6, 1590. No wonder, since he could contrive to get the pope's pocket picked, when his holiness was asleep, of the keys of a cabinet, by which he made himself master of an original letter of the first importance, which proved the saving of our island from the machinations of its enemies.

 before his death, he dressed himself in that funevast temple, numerous as those of the Pantheon.

 I content myself with the mention of the High Altar, which dazzled with gems and gold, the gifts of its numerous votaries. John, king of France, when prisoner in England, first paying his respects to St. Erkenwald's shrine, offered four basons of gold: and the gifts at the obsequies of princes, foreign and British, were of immense value. On the day of the conversion of the tutelar saint, the charities were prodigious, first to the souls, when an indulgence of forty days pardon was given, verè pœnitentibus, contritis et confessis; and, by order of Henry III. fifteen hundred tapers were placed in the church, and fifteen thousand poor people fed in the church-yard.

SINGULAR OFFERING.

BUT the most singular offering was that of a fat doe in winter, and a buck in summer, made at the high altar, on the day of the commemoration of the saint, by Sir William de Baude and his family, and then to be distributed among the canons resident. This was in lieu of twenty-two acres of land in Essex, which did belong to the canons of this church. Till queen Elizabeth's days, the doe or buck was received solemnly, at the steps of the high altar, by the dean and chapter, attired in their sacred vestments, and crowned with garlands of roses. "They sent the body of the " bucke to baking, and had the head, fixed on a " pole, borne before the crosse in the procession,
" untill they issued out of the west doore, where
" the keeper that brought it blowed the deathe of " the bucke, and then the horners, that were about
" the citie, presently answered him in like manner;
" for which paines they had each man, of the " deane and chapter, four pence in money; and " their dinner; and the keeper that brought it was " allowed, during his abode there, for his service,
" meate, drinke, and lodging, and five shillings in “ money at his going away, together with a loafe of breade having the picture of St. Paul upon it.”*

THE boys of St. Paul's were famous for acting MYSTERIES. the mysteries or holy plays, and even regular dramas. They often had the honor of performing before our monarchs. Their preparations were expensive; so that they petitioned Richard II. to prohibit some ignorant and inexperienced persons from acting the History of the Old Testament, to the great prejudice of the clergy of the church. They had their barne-bishop, or child-bishop, who BOY-BISHOP. assumed the state and attire of a prelate. Ludicrous as this holy counterfeit was, dean Colet expressly orders that his scholars shall, “ every Chil-dermas daye, come to Paulis church, and heare the chylde bishop's sermon, and after be at the hygh masse, and each of them offer a penny to the chylde bishop; and with them, the maisters and surveyors of the scole.”† This character was very common in many of the churches in France, under the name of L'Evêque des foux, or Archevêque des foux. The boy-bishops were dressed in the pontifical habits, and sung such indecent songs, danced and committed such horrible profanations, even before the altar, that at length they were suppressed by an arret of parlement,‡ at the request of the dean and chapter of Rheims.

THE holiness of this place did not prevent thieves and profligates of all denominations lurking within the precincts, and committing, under favor of the night, murders and every sort of crime.

inclose the whole within a wall; and to have gates to be shut every night, to exclude all disorderly people. Within these walls, on the north-west side, was the palace, the winter residence of the bishops of London. Froissart tells us, that after the great tournament in Smithfield, king Edward III. and his queen lodged here (I think on occasion of their nuptials): "There was goodly daunsyng in the quenes lodgynge, in presence of the kyng and his uncles, and other barons of England, and ladyes and damoysselles, tyll it was daye, whyche was tyme for every person to drawe to theyr lodgynge, except the kynge and quene, who laye there in the byshoppe's palayce, for there theye laye al the feastes and justes durynge." *

It was a building of vast extent, and frequently lodged our kings on different occasions. The poor prince Edward V. was brought here, as he supposed to take possession of the crown: and, in 1501, the unhappy Catherine of Arragon was conducted to this palace to meet her young lover;

prince Arthur; and on Nov. 14, was publicly married to him at St. Paul's: they returned to the palace, where they were entertained with a splendid nuptial feast, and resided here a few days, till they were visited by the king and queen, who took the royal pair with them by water from Baynard Castle to Westminster.*

IN 1526, Anne de Montmorenci, and others, ambassadors from Francis I. were magnificently lodged and entertained at this palace. They were sent over to ratify the important treaties between the two monarchs, and to compliment Henry with the order of St. Michael.† And in 1546, the French ambassador Claude Annebau, admiral of France, was splendidly lodged in the same place.‡ He was a favorite of Francis I. and sent over to make peace between Charles V. his master, and Henry.

IN the reign of Edward VI. the queen dowager of Scotland was here entertained. The dean's house, and the houses of the prebendaries and residentiaries, were on the opposite side; and, in those days of plain living, kept great households and liberal hospitality.§

BEFORE this cathedral was the famous Paul's Cross, a pulpit formed of wood, mounted upon steps of stone, and covered with lead, in which the most eminent divines were appointed to preach every Sunday in the forenoon. To this place, the court, the mayor and aldermen, and principal citizens, used to resort. The greatest part of the congregation sat in the open air; the king and his train had covered galleries; and the better sort of people, if I may judge from the old prints, were also protected from the injury of the weather; but the far greater part stood exposed in the open air: for which reason the preacher went, in very bad weather, to a place called the Shrowds; a covered space on the side of the church, to protect the congregation in inclement seasons. Considerable contributions were raised, among the nobility and citizens, to support such preachers as were (as was often the case) called to town from either of the universities. In particular, the lord mayor and aldermen ordered that every preacher, who came from a distance, should be freely accommodated, during five days, with sweet and convenient lodgings, fire, candle, and all necessities. And notice was given by the bishop of London, to the preacher appointed by him, of the place he was to repair to.

THE origin of the custom of preaching at crosses, was probably accidental. The sanctity of this species of pillar often caused a great resort of people, to pay their devotion to the object of their erection. A preacher, seeing a large concourse, might be seized by a sudden impulse, ascend the steps, and deliver his pious advice from a station so fit to inspire attention, and so conveniently formed for the purpose. The example might be followed, till the practice became established by custom.

It certainly at first was a common cross, and coeval with the church. When it was first covered, and converted into a pulpit-cross, we are not informed. We are given to understand that it was overthrown by an earthquake in 1382, and that William Courtney, then archbishop of Canterbury, collected great sums for rebuilding it; which, says dean Nowel, in a sermon he preached at this cross, he applied to his own use. Courtney was a most munificent prelate, and not likely to abuse the charity of his flock; yet it was not rebuilt till the time of Thomas Kemp, elected bishop of London in 1449, who finished it in the form, says Godwin, in which we see it at present;* and so it stood till it was demolished, in 1643, by an order of parliament, executed by the willing hands of Isaac Pennington, the fanatical lord mayor of that year, who died in the Tower, a convicted regicide.

WE hear of this cross being in use as early as the year 1259. It was used not only for the instruction of mankind, by the doctrine of the preacher, but for every purpose political or ecclesiastical: for giving force to oaths, for promulgating laws, or rather the royal pleasure: for the emission of papal bulls, for anathematizing sinners, for benedictions, for exposing penitents under censure of the church, for recantations, for the private ends of the ambitious, and for the defaming of those who had incurred the displeasure of crowned heads.

IN 1259, Henry III. commanded the lord mayor to swear, before the aldermen, every person of twelve years and upwards, to be true to him and his heirs.

In 1262, the same monarch caused the bull of Urban IV. to be here made public, as an absolution of him and his adherents, who had sworn to observe the Oxford provisions, made in the violent meeting at that city in 1258, called the mad parliament.

HERE, in 1299, Ralph de Baldoc, dean of St. Paul's, cursed all those who had searched, in the church of St. Martin in the Fields, for a hoard of gold, &c.

THE PE-NANCE OF
JANE SHORE.

BEFORE this cross, in 1433, was brought, divested of all her splendor, Jane Shore, the charitable, the merry concubine of Edward IV. and, after his death, of his favorite, the unfortunate lord Hastings. After the loss of her protectors, she fell a victim to the malice of crook-backed Richard. He was disappointed (by her excellent defence) of convicting her of witchcraft, and confederating with her lover to destroy him. He then attacked her on the weak side of frailty. This was undeniable. He consigned her to the severity of the church: she was carried to the bishop's palace, cloathed in a white sheet, with a taper in her hand, and from thence conducted to the cathedral, and the cross, before which she made a confession of her only fault. Every other virtue bloomed in this ill-fated fair with the fullest vigour. She could not resist the solicitations of a youthful monarch, the handsomest man of his time. On his death she was reduced to necessity, scorned by the world, and cast off by her husband, with whom she was paired in her childish years, and forced to fling herself into the arms of Hastings.

"In her penance she went," says Holinshed, "in countenance and pase demure, so womanlie, that, albeit she were out of all araie, save her kirtle onlie, yet went she so faire and lovelie, namelie, while the woondering of the people cast a comelie rud in hir cheeks, (of whiche she before had most misse) that hir great shame wan hir much praise among those that were more amorous of hir bodie than curious of hir soule. And manie good folkes that hated hir living, (and glad were to see sin corrected) yet pitied they more hir penance, than rejoised therin, when they considered that the Protector

“ procured it more of a corrupt intent, than anie “ virtuous affection.”*

Rowe has clothed this part of her sad story in the following poetical dress ; but it is far from depreciating the moving simplicity of the old historian.

Submissive, sad, and lowly was her look ;
 A burning taper in her hand she bore,
 And on her shoulders carelessly confus'd,
 With loose neglect, her lovely tresses hung ;
 Upon her cheek a faintish flush was spread ;
 Feeble she seem'd, and sorely smit with pain,
 While, barefoot as she trod the flinty pavement,
 Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood.
 Yet silent still she pass'd, and unrepining ;
 Her streaming eyes bent ever on the earth,
 Except when, in some bitter pang of sorrow,
 To Heav'n she seem'd in fervent zeal to raise,
 And beg that mercy man deny'd her here.

THE poet has adopted the fable of her being denied all sustenance, and of her perishing with hunger ; but that was not fact. She lived to an advanced age, but in great distress and miserable poverty ; deserted even by those to whom she had, during prosperity, done the most essential services. She dragged a wretched life, to the time of Sir Thomas More, who introduces her story into his life of Edward V. The beauty of her person is spoken of in high terms : “ Proper she was, and “ faire : nothing in hir bodie that you would have “ changed ; but you would have wished hir some“ what higher. Thus saie they that knew hir in “ hir youth.—Now is she old, leane, withered, “ and dried up; nothing left but rivelled skin and “ hard bone; and yet, being even such, who so “ well advise her visage, might gesse and devise,

“ which parts how filled would make it a faire “ face.”*

THE late ingenious the Reverend Michael Ty-son made me a present of an etching of this unfortunate fair, done from the supposed original in the provost's lodgings, in King's College, Cambridge. Her hair is curled in short curls high above her neck, and mixed with chains of jewels set in a lozenge form: her neck and body, as far beneath her arms, are naked; the first has¹ two strings of pearls hanging loose round it: over her shoulders is a rich chain of jewels set in circles, and pendant from the middle, which hangs down her breast, is a rich lozenge of jewels, and to each link is affixed one or more pearls. In her countenance is no appearance of charms; she must have attracted the hearts of her lovers by her intellectual beauties.

For my part, I entertain doubts as to the authenticity of this portrait: but am clear that the elegant engraving given in Mr. Harding's Illustrations tions of Shakespeare by Prints, N° IV. is taken from a picture of some beauty of the succeeding century. The lady there represented is in the dress of the times of Henry VIII. and of his successors, to the end of the reign of Elizabeth. The famous picture of Mary Stuart, by Zuccherò, at Chiswick-house, is exactly in this habit. Many similar may be found among the English portraits; and among the French, cotemporary with the periods I mention.

PROSTITUTE
PREACHERS.

UNDER her cruel prosecutor, this pulpit-cross became the seat of prostituted eloquence. The usurper made use of Doctor Shaw, brother to his creature the lord mayor, and friar Pinke, an Augustin, (both, says Stow, doctors of divinity, both great preachers, both of more learning than virtue) as his engines. They addressed the people, inferred the bastardy of his brother's children, and enlarged on the great qualities of their ambitious employer. But Pinke lost his voice in the middle of his sermon, and was forced to descend; and Shaw was afterward struck with such remorse, finding himself despised by all the world, that he soon died of a broken heart.*

ROYAL CON-TRACTS OF MARRIAGE.

ROYAL contracts of marriage were notified to the people from this place. Thus that between Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. and James the IVth of Scotland, was here declared in 1501; Te Deum was sung, twelve bonfires set a blazing, and twelve hogshheads of Gascogne wine given to the populace.*

BUT the most famous preachments ever made here, were those by order of Henry VIII; who compelled the bishop of London to send up to Paul's Cross, from Sunday to Sunday, preachers to preach down the pope's authority; to shew to the people that he was no more than the simple bishop of Rome, and that his usurpations were only the effect of the negligence of the princes of this realm.† And thus his holiness's bulls were fairly baited out of the kingdom by his own dogs.

FROM this pulpit was proclaimed to the people, by Henry Holbetch, bishop of Rochester, the death-bed remorse of the same tyrant; who, finding the stroke inevitable, ordered the church of the Grey Friars, which he had converted into a store-house, to be cleared of the goods, and opened for divine service, and presented by patent to the city, for relieving the poor.‡

formers bore that badge as a mark of their escape : the Catholics were excused from the burning, therefore were excused from the burden. The last who appeared, was a seminary priest, who, in 1593, made his recantation. In 1537, Sir Thomas Newman, priest, bore the faggot here on a singular occasion, for singing mass with good ale. To this place Henry Grey, duke of Suffolk, sent his chaplain Harding, to dissuade the people from revolting from their allegiance to queen Mary : * yet, actuated by weakness and ambition, concurred in setting up his unhappy daughter, Jane Grey, in opposition to his rightful sovereign.

WE are told in Strype's Memorials, iii. 21, that queen Mary made use of the same arts in the same place, and appointed several of her best divines to preach the old religion, and her design of restoring the antient worship : but so averse were the people, that the attempt was attended with great tumults. These she allayed by the temporary expedients of fire and faggot.

THE REFOR-MATION

THE reign of queen Elizabeth was wisely ushered in by the appointment of good and able men to preach from this Cross the doctrine of the Reformation, and rejection of the Papal power ; † in which politics were naturally intermixed. This began April the 9th, 1559, with doctor Bill, the queen's almoner; he was followed by Grindal, Harn, Jewel, Sandys, and many others, who soon after enjoyed the highest dignities in the church.

THE same heroine, giving way to a most ungenerous passion, caused from this pulpit the memory of her once-beloved Essex to be blackened; to suffer "the indignity of a sermon at Paul's Cross,
 " set out in command. Some sparks of indigna" tion remaining in the queen, that were unquench-
 " ed even by his blood."*

ESSEX CALUMNIATED.

It was more worthily employed, when her majesty caused from thence a sermon of thanksgiving to Providence, in 1588, for the signal deliverance of her subjects from the invincible armada of Philip II.

DEFEAT OF THE ARMADA ANNOUNCED.

AFTER the battle of St. Quintin, her predecessor, queen Mary, caused doctor Harpsfield to preach a sermon, and from this Cross to give the people information of the victory gained by count Egmont, general of her husband, Philip of Spain, over the French, and of the succeeding capture of St. Quintin; before which that monarch, the only time in his life, appeared clad in armour.

BATTLE OF ST. QUINTIN.

IN 1596, while the lord mayor and aldermen were attending a sermon at this place, they received an order from the queen, to levy a thousand able-bodied men. They quitted their devotions, and performed their commission before eight at night, and had them ready armed for their march before morning. The service they were designed for was to assist the French in raising the siege of Calais, then besieged by the Spaniards; but the place being taken by the time they reached Dover, they returned to the city, after a week's absence. From the usual policy of Elizabeth, it is possible the sermon and order were both preconcerted; the moment of devotion being the aptest to inspire zeal, and promote an enthusiastic ardor in the people to fly to a standard raised against a nation so detested, and so inimical to our religion and liberties, as the Spaniards.

JAMES I.
HEARS A SER-
CROSS.

THE last sermon which was preached at this place, was before James I. who came in great state on horseback from Whitehall, on Midlent Sunday, 1620: he was received at Temple Bar by the lord mayor and aldermen, who presented him with a purse of gold. At St. Paul's he was received by the clergy in their richest vestments. Divine service was performed, attended with organs, cornets, and sagbots; after which his majesty went to a prepared place, and heard a sermon at the Cross, preached by John King, bishop of London. The object of the sermon was the reparation of the cathedral. The king and the principal persons retired from the Cross to the bishop's palace, to consult on the matter, and, after a magnificent banquet, the court returned to Whitchall.*

I WILL pass unnoticed the preceding misfortunes which this cathedral has experienced, and only mention the last, previous to its final destruction by the great fire. In 1561, the noble spire was totally burnt by lightning; or, as others say, by the carelessness of a workman, who made a confession of it on his death-bed. After this it never was restored. This circumstance shews the date of 1560, to Aggas's famous survey of London, to have been erroneous: he having represented the church without the spire; which he never could have omitted, had it existed at that time.

SPIRE OF THE
CHURCH
BURNT.

IN consequence of the resolutions taken in 1620, by James I. to repair the cathedral, the celebrated Inigo Jones was appointed to the work. But it was not attempted till the year 1633, when Laud laid the first stone, and Inigo the fourth. That great architect began with the most notorious impropriety, that of adding a portico of the Corinthian order (beautiful indeed in itself) to the west end of this ancient gothic pile; † to the end of the two transepts he put gothic fronts in a most horrible style. The great fire made way for the restoration of this magnificent pile by Sir CHRISTO-

ST. PAUL'S REBUILT AFTER THE FIRE.

PHER WREN, surveyor general of his majesty's works, an architect worthy of so great an undertaking. I will not attempt to describe so well-known a building; the description is well done in several books easily to be procured.* Sir Christopher made a model in wood of his first conception for rebuilding this church, in the Roman style. He had in it an eye to the loss of the Pulpit-cross, and had supplied its place by a magnificent auditory within, for the reception of a large congregation. This was approved by men of excellent judgment, but laid aside under the notion that it had not sufficiently a temple-like form. A second was made, selected out of various sketches he had drawn; on this design Sir Christopher set a high value: but this also was rejected.† The third, which produced the present noble pile, was approved and executed. A singular accident happened at the beginning: while the great architect was setting out the dimensions of the dome, he ordered a common laborer to bring him a flat stone, to be laid as a direction to the masons; he brought a fragment of a gravestone, on which was the word RESURGAM. This was not lost on Sir

Christopher; he caught the idea of the Phœnix, which he placed on the south portico, with that word cut beneath.

THE first stone was laid on June 21, 1675; and the building completed in 1710;* but the whole decorations were not finished till 1723.† It is a most singular circumstance, that notwithstanding it was thirty-five years in building, it was begun and finished by one architect, and under one prelate, Henry Compton, bishop of London. It is also said that the same stone-mason (whose name was Strong) saw the laying of the first and the last stone. The church of St. Peter was a hundred and thirty-five years in building, in the reigns of nineteen popes, and went through the hands of twelve architects. St. Paul's is not, as is often supposed, built after the model of that famous temple: it is the entire conception of our great countryman; and has been preferred in some respects, by a judicious writer, to even the Roman Basilica. Its dimensions are smaller. A comparative view of them is given in the Parentalia, and copied in London and its Environs.—I will only mention the great outlines:—The height of St. Peter's, to the top of the cross, is four hundred and thirty-seven feet and a half; that of St. Paul's, three hundred and forty feet: so that, from its situation, it is lofty enough to be seen from the sea. The length of the first, is seven hundred and twenty-nine feet; of the latter, five hundred. The greatest breadth of St. Peter's is three hundred and sixty-four; of St. Paul's, one hundred and eighty.

* Parentalia, 292.

I AM sorry to relate that our great architect, to whom our capital was so highly indebted, was, in 1718, dismissed from his employ (which he had for the space of fifty years most honorably discharged) in favor of Mr. Benson, whose demerits became soon so apparent, as to occasion his almost immediate removal. Sir Christopher survived this shameful insult five years: and died in his 91st year, on February 25th, 1723.

For the honor of our kingdom, it must be told, that not less than 126,604*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* was collected, in various parts, between the year 1669 and 1685, first towards the repair, and afterward towards rebuilding the fabric: the far greater part of which was contributed by the venerable and worthy clergy of that period.

IN the reigns of James I. and Charles I. the body of this cathedral was the common resort of the politicians, the news-mongers, and idle in general. It was called Paul's walk, and the frequenters known by the name of Paul's walkers.

It is mentioned in the old plays, and other books of the times. The following droll description may possibly give some amusement to the reader :

“ It is the land's epitome, or you may call it
“ to the lesser ile of Great Brittain. It is more “ than this, the whole world's map, which you “ may here discern in it's perfect'st motion, just-“ ling and turning. It is a heap of stones and “ men, with a vast confusion of languages ; and,
“ were the steeple not sanctified, nothing liker “ Babel. The noyse in it is like that of bees, a “ strange humming or buzze, mixt of walking, “ tongues, and feet. It is a kind of still roare, or “ loud whisper. It is the great exchange of all “ discourse, and no busines whatsoever but is “ here stirring and a foot. It is the synod of all “ pates politicke, joynted and laid together in the “ most serious posture ; and they are not halfe so “ busie at the parliament. It is the anticke of “ tailes to tailes, and backes to backes ; and for “ vizards, you need goe no further than faces. It “ is the market of young lecturers, whom you may “ cheapen here at all rates and sizes. It is the “ generall mint of all famous lies, which are here,
“ like the legends popery first coyn'd and stamp't
“ in the church. All inventions are emptyed here,
“ and not few pockets. The best signe of a tem“ ple in it is, that it is the theeves sanctuary, front. This rose from the chizzel of Francis Bird, as did the conversion of St. Paul in the pediment,

With grace divine, great Anna's seen to rise,
 An awful form that glads a nation's eyes :
 Beneath her feet four mighty realms appear,
 And with due reverence pay their homage there.
Britain and Ireland seem to own her grace,
 And ev'n wild India wears a smiling face.

But France alone with downcast eyes is seen,
 The sad attendant of so good a queen :
 Ungrateful country ! to forget so soon
 All that great Anna for thy sake has done :
 When sworn the kind defender of thy cause,
 Spite of her dear religion, spite of laws ;
 For thee she sheath'd the terrors of her sword,
 For thee she broke her gen'ral—and her word :
 For thee her mind in doubtful terms she told,
 And learn'd to speak like oracles of old.
 For thee, for thee alone, what cou'd she more ?
 She lost the honour she had gain'd before ;
 Lost all the trophies, which her arms had won,
 (Such Cæsar never knew, nor Philip's son)
 Resign'd the glories of a ten years reign,
 And such as none but Marlborough's arm cou'd gain.
 For thee in annals she's content to shine,
 Like other monarchs of the Stuart line.

IN digging the foundation for the rebuilding of this cathedral, it was discovered, beneath the graves mentioned at p. 13, that the foundation of the old church rested on a layer of hard and close pot earth. Curiosity led Sir Christopher Wren to search farther. He found that on the north side it was six feet thick, that it grew thinner towards the south, and on the decline of the hill was scarcely four. On advancing farther, he met with nothing but loose sand ; at length he came to water and sand mixed with periwinkles, and other sea-shells; and, by boring, came at last to the beach, and under that the natural hard clay: which evinced that the sea had once occupied the space on which St. Paul's now stands. This sand had been one of those sand-hills frequent on many coasts, not only on those of Holland and Flanders, but on our own. It was the opinion of our great architect, that all the space between Camberwell hill and the hills of Essex had been a vast bay, at low-water a sandy plain. All which appears in some distant age to have been embanked, possibly by the Romans,* who were greatly employed in that useful work, paludibus emuniendis.

DOCTORS COMMONS.

To the south of this cathedral are the college of civilians, or Doctors Commons, the court of arches, the court of delegates, and several others, the great satellites of the church. The court of arches took its name, curia de arcubus, from having been once kept in Bow church, Cheapside. With the downfall of the church of Rome their powers decreased, and continued decreasing as the rights of mankind became better understood.

old blood of the kingdom. In the warlike times of our Henrics and our Edwards, the heralds were in full employ, and often sent upon most dangerous services; to hurl defiance into the teeth of irritated enemies, or to bring to their duty profligate rebels. Sometimes it has cost them their nose and ears, and sometimes their heads. At present they rest safe from all harms: are often of great use in proving consanguinity, and helping people to supply legal clames to estates; and still more frequently are of infinite service to our numerous children of fortune, by furnishing them with a quantum sufficit of good blood, and enabling them to strut in the motley procession of gentility.

THE house they occupy was built on the site of Derby-house, a palace of the great family of the Stanleys. It was built by the first earl, father-in-law to Henry VII. who in it lived and died, as did his son George, the intended victim to the rage of Richard III. before the battle of Bosworth. Edward earl of Derby, that prodigy of charity and hospitality,* exchanged it with Edward VI. for certain lands adjoining to his park at Knowsley, in Lancashire. Queen Mary presented it to Dethick, Garter king of arms, and his brother heralds, to live in, and discharge the business of their office.* This house was destroyed in the great fire, but soon rebuilt. It is inhabited by several of the heralds. J. C. Brooke, esq; Somerset, must permit me to acknowledge his frequent services and liberal communications.

IN this neighborhood, to the west, stood the royal wardrobe, kept in a house built by Sir John Beauchamp, who made it his residence. It was sold to Edward III. In the 5th of Edward IV. it was given to William lord Hastings, and was afterward called Huntingdon-house, and became the lodging of Richard III. in his second year.

ADJACENT to it (on the west) was Scrope's-inn, in the 31st of Henry VI.

RIDER-
STREET.

ACROSS Bennet-hill passes Knight-rider-street, so named from the gallant train of knights who were wont to pass this way, in the days of chivalry, from the Tower Royal to the gay tournaments at Smithfield. From hence I pass to the King's Exchange, or the Old Change, a street parallel to the east side of St. Paul's church-yard, which crosses the Roman road, or Watling-street, and terminates close to the west end of Cheapside. This was the seat of the King's Exchanger, who delivered out to the other exchangers, through the kingdom, their coining irons, and received them again when worn out, with an account of the sums coined: neither was any body to make change of plate, or other mass of silver, unless at this place.*

To the east of Knight-rider-street, on the south side of Basing-lane, stood the mansion of Sir John Gisors, mayor of London, and constable of the Tower in 1311. In the turbulent time of Edward II. he was charged with several harsh and unjust proceedings, and, being summoned to appear before the king's justices, to answer to the accusation, he, and other principal citizens, fled, and put themselves under the protection of the rebellious barons. His house was built upon arched vaults, and had arched gates made of stone brought from Caen. In the lofty roofed hall, says Stow, in his Survaie, p. 665, stood a large fir-pole, nearly forty feet high, which was feigned to have been the staff of Gerardus, a mighty giant: which proved to be no more than a May-pole, which, according to antient custom, used to be decked and placed annually before the door. From this fable the house long bore the name of Gerard's-hall, but it was properly changed to that of Gisors. It remained in the family till the year 1386, when it was alienated by Thomas Gisors. The house was divided into several parts, and in the time of Stow was a common hosterie, or inn. At present nothing remains but the vault, supported by pillars, which serves as cellars to the houses built on the site of the old mansion.

DOCTOR
LINACRE.

IN this street stood the College of Physicians, till it was destroyed by the great fire: it was founded by that ornament of his age, Doctor Linacre, the greatest and most general scholar of his time. He lived in this street, and left his house to the public, for the use of his institution. He was appointed by Henry VII. physician to prince Arthur, and also his tutor. He was besides physician to that monarch, and Henry VIII.; and died in 1524, an honor to our country. He had travelled much, and was particularly respected by the reigning duke of Tuscany, (the politest scholar of his days,) and other foreigners; and met at home with a return suitable to his merit.

ORMOND-
PLACE.

IN the same street was Ormond-place, belonging to the Botclers. In the 5th of Edward IV. it was given to the queen; but in 1515 it was restored to the Botclers.

CHEAPSIDE.

CHEAPSIDE received its name from Chape, a market, as being originally the great street of splendid shops. In the year 1246 it was an open field, called Crown-field, from an hosterie, or inn, with the sign of a crown, at the east end. "At the same period," adds Stow, at p. 187 of his Chronicle, "nor two hundred years after, was any “ street in London paved, except Thames-street, “ and from Ludgate-hill to Charing-cross.” The goldsmiths shops were particularly superb, “ con“ sisting,” says Stow, “ of a most beautiful frame “ of faire houses and shops than be within the “ walls of London or elsewhere in England, com“ monly called Goldsmiths-Row; builded by Tho- “ mas Wood, goldsmith, and one of the sheriffes of “ London in 1491. It contained tenne faire “ dwelling houses and fourteen shops, all in one “ frame, uniformly builded foure stories high, “ beautified toward the street with the gold-“ smithes arms, and likeness of woodmen, in “ memorie of his name, riding on monstrous of this street, stands the hall of this opulent company. In the court-room is a fine portrait of Sir Hugh Myddelton, with a shell by him, out of which he may be supposed to have poured the useful element to the thirsting metropolis. The words Fontes Fodinæ are painted on the picture, to imply his double attentions. The wealth he got in the mines was totally exhausted in the execution of his project, of which the metropolis, to this moment, receives increasing benefit. Sir Hugh left a share in the New River to this company, for the benefit of the decayed members; which, even in 1704, amounted to 134l.*

THE GOLDSMITHS COMPANY.

HERE is a good portrait of Sir Martin Bowes, lord mayor in 1545, with his chain and robes of office. The date of his picture is 1566.†

St. Dunstan appears here in canvas, in a rich robe, and with his crosier. The unfortunate devil is not forgotten, roaring between the pincers of the saint; with the heavenly host above, applauding the deed. It seems by this that St. Dunstan amused himself in works of gold as well as iron: so that it is no wonder to see the evil spirit in a place where the irritamenta malorum so much abound.

* This share is called a 62d, and is said to be divided annually between one hundred poor freemen or widows of freemen.—When the editor visited Goldsmith's Hall this year (1812), the more opulent members of the company had experienced a severe disappointment in not being able to procure (on account of the backwardness of the season) the customary supply of fifty-two quarts of green pease at their annual feast on the 29th of May. Five guineas per quart were offered, but unable to obtain the full supply, they either to prevent competition or the disputes which might arise, wisely abstained from producing any of this enviable luxury. Ed.

† By Sir Martin Bowes is represented the cup given to the Company by Queen Elizabeth. In the same room are portraits of Sir Charles Hosier and Sir Thomas Viner. Above stairs is the curious groupe of Alderman Ben and five chubby-faced Jacobite witzens, who retired to the isle of Wight in 1746, to drink the Pretender's health in security. This picture was the last of Hudson's works, and is engraved by Faber, under the name of the Alderman's Club. Ed.

QUEEN Elizabeth presented this company with a silver cup, out of which annual libations are made to her memory. She was particularly kind to the citizens, and borrowed money of them on all occasions. The Goldsmiths must of course have enjoyed a distinguished place in her esteem.

THIS company appeared as a fraternity as early as 1180, being then amerced for being adulterine, or for setting up without the king's licence. In the reign of Edward III. they obtained a patent, and were incorporated for the sum of ten marks. Richard II. confirmed the same, in consideration of the sum of twenty marks. They increased in wealth, and have left evident marks of charity, by having above a thousand pounds a year to dispose of for benevolent purposes. They became in time the bankers of the capital. The Lombards were the first and the greatest, and most of the money contracts in old times passed through their hands. Many of our monarchs were obliged to them for money. They did not seem to like trusting Henry IV. on his bond, so took the customs in pawn for their loan.

THE business of goldsmiths was confined to the buying and selling of plate, and foreign coins of gold and silver, melting them, and coining others at the mint. The banking was accidental, and foreign to their institution.

REGULAR banking by private people resulted, BANKERS.

GOLDSMITHS THE ANTIENT BANKERS.

in 1643, from the calamity of the time, when the seditious spirit was incited by the arts of the parliamentary leaders. The merchants and tradesmen, who before trusted their cash to their servants and apprentices, found that no longer safe; neither did they dare to leave it in the mint at the Tower, by reason of the distresses of majesty itself, which before was a place of public deposit. In the year 1645, they first placed their cash in the hands of goldsmiths, who then began publicly to exercise both professions. Even in my days were several very eminent bankers, who kept the goldsmiths shop: but they were more frequently separated. The first regular banker was Mr. Francis Child, goldsmith, who began business soon after the Restoration. He was the father of the profession, a person of large fortune and most respectable character. He married, between the years 1665 and 1675, Martha, only daughter of Robert Blanchard, citizen and goldsmith, by whom he had twelve children. Mr. Child was afterward knighted. He lived in Fleet-street, where the shop still continues,* in a state of the highest respectability. Mr. Granger† mentions Mr. Child as successor to the shop of alderman Backwel, a banker in the time of Charles II. noted for his integrity, abilities, and industry; who was ruined by the shutting up of the exchequer in 1672. His books were placed in the hands of Mr. Child, and still remain in the family.

THE next antient shop was that possessed at present by Messrs. Snow and Denne, a few doors to the west of Mr. Child's: who were goldsmiths of consequence in the latter part of the same reign. Mr. Gay celebrates the predecessor of these gentlemen, for his sagacity in escaping the ruin of the fatal year 1720, in his epistle to Mr. Thomas Snow, goldsmith, near Temple Bar:

O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The South-Sea rocks, and shelves where thousands drown'd!
When credit sunk and commerce gasping lay
Thou stood'st; nor sent'st one bill unpaid away.

To the west of Temple Bar, the only one was that of Messrs. Middleton and Campbel, goldsmiths, who flourished in 1692, and is now continued, with great credit, by Mr. Coutts. From thence to the extremity of the western end of the town, there was none till the year 1756, when the respectable name of *Backwel rose again, conjoined to those of Darel, Hart, and Croft, who with great reputation opened their shop in Pall Mall.

* Of the same family with the great Mr. Backwel. He favored me with a beautiful print of his worthy relation, which had been engraven in Holland, after his flight from his profligate country.

ST. MARTIN'S
LE GRAND.

FOSTER-LANE bounds on the east that remarkable place, St. Martin's Le Grand: imperium in imperio: surrounded by the city, yet subject for nearly three centuries to the governing powers of Westminster Abby. A large and fair college was founded, A. D. 700, by Wythred king of Kent; and rebuilt and chiefly endowed by two noble Saxon brothers, Ingelric and Edward, about the year 1056. William the Conqueror confirmed it in 1068, and even made it independent of every other ecclesiastical jurisdiction, from the regal and even the papal.* It was governed by a dean, and had a number of secular canons. Succeeding monarchs confirmed all its privileges. It had Sak, Sok, Tol, and all the long list of Saxon indulgences, enumerated by the accurate Strype.† It had also from the beginning the dreadful privilege of sanctuary, which was the cause of its being the resort of every species of profligates, from the murderer to the pick-pocket; a privilege most tenaciously vindicated by its holy rulers. In 1489 a soldier, who for some crime was conducted from Newgate towards Guildhall, was rescued by five fellows who rushed out of Panyer-alley, and fled with him into the adjacent sanctuary. The sheriffs of that year, Philip Malpas and Robert Marshall, entered the church, and seizing on the soldier and the other ruffians, carried them chained to Newgate.^{*} The dean and chapter complained of this breach of privilege: the cause was heard, and the sheriffs were obliged to deliver the men into the sanctuary. But in 1457 the king thought proper to regulate these privileges, and to distinguish how far they might be protected; and that the dean and chapter should take care that none of the villainous refugees should become further noxious to their fellow-creatures.[†]

A MAGNIFICENT church was erected within this jurisdiction, which was continued till the college was surrendered, in 1548, when it was pulled down, and a great tavern erected in the place. St. Martin's Le Grand was then, and still continues, under the government of the dean of Westminster. It was granted to that monastery by Henry VII. It still continues independent of the city: numbers of mechanics (particularly taylor and shoe-makers) set up there, and exercise their trades within its limits, and vote for the members of the city of Westminster. The dean and chapter have a court here, and a prison: and, I think, all processes to be executed within this liberty, are to be directed, by the sheriffs of London, to the constable of the dean and chapter of Westminster.

CENT
CHURCH.

THIS church, with those of Bow, St. Giles's Cripplegate, and Barkin, had its Curfew bell long after the servile injunction laid on the Londoners had ceased. These were sounded to give notice to the inhabitants of those districts to keep within, and not to wander in the streets: which were infested by a set of ruffians, who made a practice of insulting, wounding, robbing, and murdering the people whom they happened to meet abroad during the night.*

In the year 1480 this church† was robbed by five thieves. Three of them were drawn to the Tower Hill, and hanged and burnt. The other two were pressed to death; probably they were obstinate and refused to plead.

CHEAPSIDE. THE view we have of Cheapside, as it appeared just before the great fire, shews that it was spacious and beautiful. The cross and conduit are to be seen; and the long row of shops, which projected from the houses, reached to the bottom of the first floors, and were lighted by windows in the roofs. This shews the antient form of building our more magnificent streets. On the south side stands the church of St. Mary le Bow, or de arcubus, because it originally was built upon arches. It perished in 1666, and was rebuilt after a design of Sir Christopher Wren's. I cannot express myself better than in the words of an ingenious writer, who calls it “ a delightful absurd-“dity.”* In this church was interred Sir John Coventry, mercer, lord mayor in 1425, and ancestor and founder of the family of the earl of Coventry. I beg leave here to remind several other noble peers of their industrious and honest forefathers.

JOHN COVENTRY, son of William Coventry, of the city of that name, was an opulent mercer of the city of London, and mayor in 1425; a most spirited magistrate, who dared to interfere in the dreadful quarrel between Humphrey duke of Glocester and the insolent cardinal Beaufort, which he successfully quelled. From his loins is descended the present earl of Coventry.

PEERS
TRADE.

EARL OF COVENTRY.

THE family of RICH, earls of Warwick and Holland, arose from Richard Rich, an opulent mercer, sheriff in the year 1441. His descendant Richard was distinguished by his knowledge of the law: became solicitor-general in the reign of Henry; and treacherously effected the ruin of Sir Thomas More: was created a baron of the realm in the reign of Edward VI. and became lord chancellor by the favor of the same monarch.

RICH, EARLS OF WAR-WICK.

THE HOLLES's, earls of Clare, and afterward dukes of Newcastle, sprung from Sir William Holles, mayor in 1540, son to William Holles, citizen and baker: his great grandson was the first who was called to the house of peers, in the reign of James I. by the title of lord Houghton, and soon after was advanced to the dignity of earl of Clare. The fourth of that title was created, by king William, duke of Newcastle ; but the title became extinct in his name in 1711.

SIR THOMAS LEIGH, mayor in 1558, furnished the peerage with the addition of two. He was son to Roger Leigh, of Wellington, Shropshire. Sir Thomas's grandson, Francis, was created by LEIGH EARL OF CHICHESTER. Charles I. lord Dunsmore, and afterward earl of Chichester ; and Sir Thomas's second son, Sir Thomas Leigh, of Stonely, had the honor of being called to the house of peers by the same monarch, LORD LEIGH. by the title of lord Leigh of Stonely.

EARL OF RADNOR.

THE PLEYDEL-BOUVIERIES, earls of Radnor, descend from Edward de Bouverie, who died an opulent Turkey-merchant in 1694.

BARON
DUCIE.

DUCIE, lord Ducie de Morton, is descended from Sir Robert Ducie, baronet, sheriff in 1620, and mayor in 1631. He became banker to Charles I. and, on the breaking out of the civil war, lost 80,000*l.* owing by his majesty. Yet is said to have left behind him 400,000*l.* So profitable, in all ages, are, to individuals, the calamities of war.

PAUL BANNING, sheriff in 1593, had a son of the same name, who was first created a baronet, and in the third of Charles I. a baron of this realm, by the title of baron Banning ; and soon after a viscount, by the title of baron Banning of Sudbury. VISCOUNT BANNING.

He was buried in the paternal tomb, in the church of St. Olave's. His house was in Mark-lane: after the fire of London, the business of the custom-house being transacted in that which went under the name of lord Banning's.*

THE CRANFIELDS, earls of Middlesex, rose from Lionel Cranfield, a citizen of London, bred up in the custom-house.† He became, in 1620, lord treasurer of England. The duke of Dorset is descended from Frances, sister and heir to the third earl of Middlesex, married to Richard earl of Dorset. DUKE OF
DORSET.

THE noble family of INGRAM, viscount Irwin, were raised, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, by Hugh Irwin, citizen; merchant, and tallow-chandler, who died in 1612. He left a large fortune between two sons; of which Sir Arthur, the younger, settled in Yorkshire, and purchased a considerable estate: the foundation of the great fortune at present enjoyed by the family. VISCOUNT IRWIN.

SIR STEPHEN BROWN, son of John Brown of Newcastle, mayor in 1438, and again in 1448, was a grocer; and gave to us another peer, in the person of Sir Anthony Brown, created viscount Mountague by Philip and Mary, in 1554. VISCOUNT MOUNTAGUE.

* City Remembrancer, ii. 28.—The name is often spelt Bayning.

† Kennet, ii. 727.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

THE LEGGES rose to be earls of Dartmouth. The first who was nobilitated was that loyal and gallant sea officer George Legge, created baron of Dartmouth in 1682. He was descended from an ancestor of one of the above-mentioned names, who filled the prætorian chair of London in the years 1347 and 1354, having, by his industry in the trade of a skinner, attained to great wealth.

EARL OF WILTSHIRE.

SIR GEFFRY BULLEN, mayor in 1458, was grandfather to Thomas earl of Wiltshire, father of Anna Bullen, and grandfather to queen Elizabeth; the highest genealogical honor the city ever possessed.

VISCOUNT
CAMPDEN.

SIR BAPTIST HICKS was a great mercer at the accession of James I. and made a vast fortune by supplying the court with silks. He was first knighted, afterward created viscount Campden. It is said he left his two daughters a hundred thousand pounds each. He built a large house in St. John's-street, for the justices of Middlesex to hold their sessions, which (till its demolition a very few years ago, upon the erection of a new sessions-house on Clerkewell-Green) retained the name of Hicks's Hall.

EARL OF ESSEX.

THE CAPELS, earls of Essex, are descended from Sir William Capel, draper, mayor in 1503. He first set up a cage in every ward, for the punishment of idle people.

MICHAEL DORMER, mercer, mayor in 1542, produced the future lord Dermers. VISCOUNT DORMER.

EDWARD OSBOHN, by his fortunate leap, as before related, when apprentice to Sir William Hewet, attained in consequence great wealth and honors. He was mayor in 1583; and from his loins sprung the dukes of Leeds. DUKE OF LEEDS.

FROM SIR WILLIAM CRAVEN, merchant-taylor, mayor in 1611, sprung the gallant earl Craven, who was his eldest son, and was greatly distinguished by his actions in the service of the unfortunate Elector Palatine, by his attachment to the dowager, and his marriage with that illustrious princess. EARL CRAVEN.

LORD VISCOUNT DUDLEY AND WARD is descended from William Ward, a wealthy goldsmith in London, and jeweller to Henrietta Maria, queen to Charles I. His son, Humble Ward, married Frances, grand-daughter of Edward Sutton, lord Dudley, on the death of her grandfather baroness of Dudley; and he himself was created, in 1643, lord Ward, of Birmingham. VISCOUNT DUDLEY AND WARD.

THE old church of Bow was founded in the time of William the Conqueror; we have before given the origin of the name, which was from the arches of the foundation, not of the steeple, which was rebuilt with arches, or in a crown fashion, but not till long after the year 1512.* The church

STORY OF FITZ-OS-
BERT.

was long a noted sanctuary, and one of those which Henry VIII. in his thirty-second year, exempted from suppression. In this place, in 1196, one William Fitz-Osbert, alias Long Beard, a seditious fellow of uncommon eloquence, but of the lowest rank, set up as advocate for the poor citizens against the oppressions of the rich. He took an opportunity of beginning a tumult by inflaming their minds against a certain tax, raised entirely for the necessities of the state. Many lives were lost on the occasion, at St. Paul's. Hubert, the great justiciary, summoned Long Beard to appear before him; but found him so well supported, that he thought it prudent to forbear punishment. This served but to increase his insolence. He grew so outrageous, that the citizens were resolved to bring him to justice: a resolute band made the attempt, when he and a few desperate fellows fled to the tower of Bow steeple, which they fortified. The besiegers, seeing the mob assemble from all parts for his rescue, made a fire at the bottom, which forced him and his companions to sally out; but they were taken, and the next day he and eight more were dragged by their heels to the Elms at Smithfield, and there hanged. Long after those days the hurdle, or the sledge, was permitted, as a sort of indulgence to the wretched sufferers.* It was said, that finding himself deserted by Heaven, he at the gallows “ forsook Mary's Son (as he called our SAVIOUR),

 “ and called upon the Devil to helpe and deliver “ him.” Yet, notwithstanding this, a cunning priest, a relation of his, stole his body, and pretended many miracles were wrought at the place of execution; and many persons passed the night on the spot which deprived them of a martyr, who died supporting the majesty of the people,
 as Thomas Becket did that of the pope.

IN the middle of Cheapside, a little to the west THE CROSS.
 of Bow church, stood the cross and the conduit.
 The first was one of the affectionate tokens of Edward I. towards his queen Eleanor, built where her body rested in its way to interment, in 1290.
 It had originally the statue of the queen, and in all respects resembled that at Northampton; at length, falling to decay, it was rebuilt, in 1441, by John Hutherby, mayor of the city, at the expence of several of the citizens. It was ornamented with various images, such as that of the Resurrection, of the Virgin, of Edward the Confessor, and the like. At every public entry it was new gilt; for the magnificent processions took this road. After the Reformation, the images gave much offence; the goddess Diana was substituted instead of the Virgin, when the symbols of superstition had been frequently mutilated. Queen

DEMOLITION OF THE CROSS.

Elizabeth disapproved of those attacks on the remnants of the old religion, and offered a large reward for the discovery of the offenders. She thought that a plain cross, the mark of the religion of the country, ought not to be the occasion of any scandal; so directed that one should be placed on the summit, and gilt.* Superstition is certain, in course of time, to take the other extreme. In the year 1649, the parliament voted the taking down of all crosses, and the demolishing of all popish paintings, &c. The destruction of this cross was committed to Sir Robert Harlow; who went on the service with true zeal, attended by a troop of horse and two companies of foot, and executed his orders most effectually. The same most pious and religious noble knight did also attack and demolish "the abominable and "most blasphemous crucifix" in Christ's hospital, and broke it into a thousand pieces.† In short, such was the rage of the times against the sign of our religion, that it was not suffered in shop-books, or even in the primers of children;‡ and as to the cross used in baptism, it became the abomination of abominations.

And some against all idolizing,
The Cross in shop-books, and baptizing.

THE Nag's-head tavern, almost opposite to the cross, was the fictitious scene of consecration of the Protestant bishops, at the accession of queen Elizabeth, in 1559. It was pretended by the adversaries of our religion, that a certain number of ecclesiastics, in their hurry to take possession of the vacant sees, assembled here, where they were to undergo the ceremony from Anthony Kitchen, alias Dustan, bishop of Landaff, a sort of occasional conformist, who had taken the oaths of supremacy to Elizabeth. Bonner, bishop of London, (then confined in the Tower) hearing of it, sent his chaplain to Kitchen, threatening him with excommunication, in case he proceeded. The prelate therefore refused to perform the ceremony: on which, say the Catholics, Parker and the other candidates, rather than defer possession of their dioceses, determined to consecrate one another; which, says the story, they did without any sort of scruple, and Scorey began with Parker, who instantly rose archbishop of Canterbury. The refutation of this tale may be read in Strype's Life of archbishop Parker, at p. 57, which makes it needless for me to enter on the attempt. A view of the tavern, and its sign, is preserved in a print in the Entrée de la Reyne Mere du Roy, or of Mary

BLOSSOM'S
INN.

IN Laurence-lane, not far from hence, was another public-house of much antiquity, and which is still in great business as a carriers inn; the Blossoms Inn, so named from the rich border of flowers which adorned the original sign, that of St. Laurence. These were the effects of his martyrdom, "for (says the legend) flowers sprung up "on the spot of his cruel martyrdom."

SPLENDID TOURNA-MENTS.

IN this street, between the cross and Sopers-lane, were held most splendid tournaments in the year 1331; they began Sept. 21, and lasted three days. A scaffold was erected for queen Philippa and her gay troop of ladies, all most richly attired, to behold the knights collected from all quarters to shew their skill in deeds of arms. The upper part of the scaffold, on which the ladies were seated, "brake in sunder, and," as Stow says, "whereby they were (with some shame) forced "to fall downe;" and many knights and others, which stood beneath, much hurt. The carpenters were saved from punishment, by the intercession of the queen; but, to prevent such accidents in future, the king ordered a building of stone to be erected, near the church of St. Mary le Bow, for himself, the queen, and "other states," to see the gallant spectacles in safety.* This was used long after for the same purpose, even till the year 1410, when Henry IV. granted it to certain mercers, who converted it into shops, warehouses, and other requisites of their trade.†

A LITTLE to the east of the cross stood the CONDUIT. conduit, which served as the mother or chief aqueduct, which was to supply the lesser conduits with water, brought by pipes from Paddington. This stood on the site of the old conduit, founded in 1285, castellated with stone, and cisterned in lead, as old Stow tells us: and again rebuilt in 1479, by Thomas Ilan, one of the sheriffs. On some very festive occasions these conduits have been made to run with claret. Such was the case at the coronation of Anna Bullen; who was received at the lesser conduit by Pallas, Juno, and Venus. Mercury, in the name of the goddesses, presented to her a ball of gold divided into three parts, signifying three gifts bestowed on her by the deities, WISDOM, RICHES, and FELICITY. But, alas! beneath them lurked speedy disgrace, imprisonment, the block, and axe.

I CANNOT well fix the place where the old THE STANDARD in Cheap stood. The time of its foundation is unknown. It appears to have been very ruinous in 1442, at which time Henry VI. granted

* Stow's Survaie, 485.

EXECUTIONS

a licence for repairing it, together with a conduit in the same. This was a place at which executions, and other acts of justice, were in old times frequently performed. Here, in 1293, three men had their heads cut off, for rescuing a prisoner arrested by a city officer. In 1351, two fishmongers were beheaded at the standard, but their crime has not reached us. In 1461, John Davy had his hand cut off, for striking a man before the judges at Westminster; and in 1399, Henry IV. caused the blank charters, made by Richard II. to be burned here, as we do libels in our times.

BUT these were legal acts. Many sad instances of barbarous executions occurred in the fury of popular commotions. Richard Lions, an eminent goldsmith, and late sheriff of the city, was in 1381 (with several others) cruelly beheaded here by order of Wat Tyler. Lions was interred in the church of St. James, Garlic-hithe, and on his tomb (now lost) was a figure in a long flowered gown, a large purse hanging in a belt from his shoulders, his hair short, his beard forked, a plain hood falling back and covering his shoulders. At the same time numbers of foreign merchants, especially Flemings, were dragged from the churches, and, the *Shibboleth of Bread and Cheese being put to them (which they pronouncing Brot and Cause) they were instantly put to death. In 1450, lord Say, high treasurer of England, lost his head at the Standard, by the brutality of John Cade. Shakespeare admirably describes the tragic scene.*

WHETHER Walter Stapleton, bishop of Exeter, suffered by the popular fury on this spot, is rather uncertain; some imagine that he was beheaded at a cross before the north door of St. Paul's;† to which church he was flying for refuge, and unfortunately seized by the mob before he had taken sanctuary.

THROUGH this street, and probably to this cross, in 1439, walked barefooted, with a taper in her hand, Eleanor Cobham, wife to Humphrey duke of Gloucester, charged with the crime of sorcery, and intending the death of the king by melting an image of wax, with which his body was to sympathize.

Limus ut hic durescit, et hæc ut cera liquescit.‡

A more serious fate attended her pretended accomplices: a woman, mother Jourdaine, (the witch) was burnt, and three men, among whom was her chaplain, were hanged.

IN Bread-street, which opens into Cheapside, stood the mansion of Edward Stafford, last earl of Wiltshire; which, in 1499, he left to his cousin the duke of Buckingham.

GUILDHALL. THE Guildhall of this vast city stands at the end of a street running northward from Cheapside. Before the year 1411, the court-hall, or Bury, as it was called, was held at Aldermans bury, so denominated from their meeting there. Stow remembered its ruins, and says, that in his days it was used as Carpenters-hall. It was succeeded by a new one, begun in 1411, and finished in twenty years, by voluntary contributions, by sums raised for pardons and offences, and by fines. Its gothic front terminates the end of King-street. Its length is a hundred and fifty-three feet; its breadth forty-eight; its height fifty-five; so that it is capable of holding thousands of people. Elections are held and every species of city business, is transacted here.

PORTRAITS. WITHIN are portraits of numbers of our judges, who frequently try causes under this roof. I must direct the reader's attention to twelve of that order of peculiar merit: these are the portraits of the able and virtuous Sir MATTHEW HALE, and his eleven cotemporary judges; who, after the dreadful calamity of 1666, regulated the rebuilding of the city of London by such wise rules, as to prevent the endless train of vexatious law-suits which might ensue; and have been little less chargeable than the fire itself. This was principally owing to

Sir Matthew Hale, who conducted the business ; and sat with his brethren in Clifford's-Inn, to compose all differences between landlord and tenant. These portraits were painted by Michael Wright, a good painter in the time of Charles II. and James II. and who died in the year 1700. It was designed that Sir Peter Lely should draw these pictures; but he fastidiously refused to wait on the judges at their chambers. Wright received sixty pounds apiece for his work.* In the year 1779, they were found to be in so bad a condition, as to make it an even question with the committee of city lands, whether they should be continued in their places, or committed to the flames. To the eternal honor of alderman Townsend, his vote decided in favor of their preservation.† He recommended Mr. Roma, (now unhappily snatched from us by death), who, by his great skill in repairing pictures, rescued them from the rage of time : so that they may remain another century,‡ a proof of the gratitude of our capital. These were proofs of a sense of real merit : but in how many places do we meet instances of a temporary idolatry, the phrenzy of the day ! Statues and portraits appear, to the astonishment of posterity, purged from the prejudices of the time,

The things themselves are neither scarce nor rare ;
The wonder's, how the devil they got there !

FACING the entrance are two tremendous figures, by some named Gog and Magog ; by Stow, an antient Briton and Saxon. I leave to others the important decision. At the bottom of the room is a marble groupe of good workmanship (with London and Commerce whimpering like two mangled children), executed soon after the year 1770, by Mr. Moore. The principal figure was also a giant, in his day, the raw-head and bloody-bones to the good folks at St. James's ; which, while remonstrances were in fashion, annually haunted the court in terrific forms. The eloquence dashed in the face of majesty, alas ! proved in vain. The spectre was there condemned to silence ; but his patriotism may be read by his admiring fellow-citizens, as long as the melancholy marble can retain the tale of the affrighted times.

GREAT FEASTS.

THE first time this hall was used on festive occasions, was by Sir John Shaw, goldsmith, knighted in the field of Bosworth. After building the essentials of good kitchens and other offices, in the year 1500 he gave here the mayor's feast, which before had usually been held in Grocers-hall. None of their bills of fare have reached me, but doubtlessly they were very magnificent. They at length grew to such excess, that, in the time of Philip and Mary, a sumptuary law was made to restrain the expence both of provisions and liveries : but I suspect, as it lessened the honor of the city, it was not long observed; for in 1554, the city thought proper to renew the order of council, by way of reminding their fellow-citizens of their relapse into luxury. Among the great feasts given here on public occasions, may be reckoned that given in 1612, on occasion of the unhappy marriage of the prince Palatine with Elizabeth, daughter of James I; who, in defiance of the remonstrances of his better-judging father-in-law, rushed on the usurpation of the dominion of another monarch, and brought great misery on himself and his amiable spouse. The next was in 1641, when Charles I. returned from his imprudent, inefficacious journey into Scotland. In the midst of the most factious and turbulent times, when every engine was set to work to annihilate the regal power, the city, under its lord mayor, Sir William Acton, made a feast unparalleled in history for its magnificence. All external respect was payed to his majesty; the last he ever experienced in the inflamed city. Of the entertainment we know no more, than that it consisted of five hundred dishes. But of that which was given in our happier days, to his present majesty, in the mayoralty of Sir Samuel Fludyer, the bill of fare is given us. This I print; and, as a parallel to it, that of another royal feast, given in 1487 at Whitehall, on occasion of the coronation of Elizabeth, queen of Henry VII. whom he treats with characteristical œconomy, notwithstanding a kingdom was her dower.*

 legendary nature; others historical; but all, with-

THE WAX-CHANDLERS
 FEAST.

To these scenes of luxury and gluttony, let me oppose the simple fare at a feast of the Wax- chandlers, on Oct. 28th, 1478. These were a flourishing company in the days of old, when gratitude to saints called so frequently for lights.
 How many thousands of wax candles were consumed on those occasions, and what quantities the expiatory offerings of private persons, none can enumerate. Candle-mass day wasted its thousands, and those all blessed by the priests, and adjured in solemn terms. "I adjure thee, O

 " waxen creature, that thou repel the devil and " his sprights, &c. &c."* Certainly this company, which was incorporated in 1484, might have afforded a more delicate feast than

ADJACENT to Guildhall, is Guildhall chapel, or college, a gothic building, founded by Peter Fan-lore, Adam Francis, and Henry Frowick, citizens, about the year 1299. The establishment was a warden, seven priests, three clerks, and four choristers. Edward VI. granted it to the mayor and commonalty of the city of London.* Here used to be service once a week, and also at the election of the mayor, and before the mayor's feast, to deprecate indigestions, and all plethoric evils. At present divine service is discontinued, the chapel being used as a justice room.

LIBRARY.

ADJOINING to it once stood a fair library, furnished with books belonging to Guildhall, built by the executors of the famous Whittington. Stow says that the protector Somerset sent to borrow some of the books, with a promise of restoring them; three Carries were laden with them, but they never more were returned.†

WALL'S
HALL.

IMMEDIATELY beyond the chapel stands Black-wall's hall, or, more properly, Bakewell, from its having in later years been inhabited by a person of that name. It was originally called Basing's haugh, or hall, from a family of that name; the coats of arms of which were to be seen cut in stone, or painted, in the antient building. It was on vaults of stone, brought from Caen in Nor-mandy; the time is uncertain, but certainly after the Conquest. The family were of great antiquity. Solomon Basing was mayor in 1216; and another of the name sheriff in 1308. In 1397 the house was purchased by the mayor and commonalty for fifty pounds, and from that time has been used as the market of woollen cloth. It became so ruinous in the time of queen Elizabeth, that it was pulled down, and rebuilt for twenty-five hundred pounds; much of it at the expence of Richard May, merchant-taylor. It consists at present of two large courts, with warehouses in all parts for the lodging of the cloth; but is very little used. Formerly there were proclamations issued to compel people to bring their goods into this hall, to prevent deceit in the manufactures, which might occasion us discredit in foreign markets, and also be the means of defrauding the poor children of Christ hospital of part of the revenue which arose from the hallage of this great magazine.

ON the north side of Cheapside stood the hospital of St. Thomas of Acon, founded by Thomas Fitz-Theobald de Helles and his wife Agnes, sister to the turbulent Thomas Becket, who was born in the house of his father Gilbert, which was situated on this spot. The mother of our meek saint was a fair Saracen, whom his father had married in the Holy Land. On the site of his house rose the hospital, built within twenty years after the murder of Thomas; yet such was the repute of his sanctity, that it was dedicated to him, in conjunction with the blessed Virgin, without waiting for his canonization. The hospital consisted of a master and several brethren, professing the rule of St. Austin. The church, cloisters, &c. were granted by Henry VIII. to the Mercers company, who had the gift of the mastership.*

HOSPITAL OF

NOW MER-CERS HALL.

IN the old church were numbers of monuments; among others, one to James Butler earl of Ormond, and Joan his wife, living in the beginning of the reign of Henry VI. This whole pile was destroyed in the great fire, but was very handsomely rebuilt by the Mercers company, who have their hall here. In the portico to the chapel is a full-length figure recumbent of Richard Fishbourn, dressed in a furred gown, and a ruff; he died in 1623, and, being a great benefactor to the place, received the honor of this monument.

IN this chapel the celebrated, but unsteady, archbishop of Spalatro, preached his first sermon, in 1617, in Italian, before the archbishop of Canterbury, and a splendid audience; and continued his discourses in the same place several times, after he had embraced our religion; but, having the folly to return to his antient faith, and trust himself among his old friends at Rome, he was shut up in the castle of St. Angelo, where he died in 1625.

THIS company is the first of the twelve, or such who are honored with the privilege of the lord mayor's being elected out of one of them. The name by no means implied originally a dealer in silks: for mercery included all sorts of small wares, toys, and haberdashery.* But, as numbers of this opulent company were merchants, and imported great quantities of rich silks from Italy, the name became applied to the company, and all dealers in silk. Not fewer than sixty-two mayors were of this company, between the years 1214 and 1762; among which it reckons Sir John Coventry, Sir Richard Whittington, and Sir Richard and Sir John Gresham. We are obliged to the exact Strype for the list. In that by Maitland, the company each mayor belonged to is omitted.

IMMEDIATELY to the east is the narrow street, the Old Jewry, which took its name from the great synagogue which stood there, till the unhappy race was expelled the kingdom, in 1291. Their persecutions, under some of the preceding monarchs, nearly equalled those of the Christians under the Roman emperors: yet the love of gain retained them in our country in defiance of all their sufferings. A new order of friars, called Fratres de Sacca, or de penitentia, got possession of the Jewish temple: but did not hold it long. Robert Fitzwalter, the great banner-bearer of the city, requested, in 1305, that the friars might assign it to him. It seems it joined to his own house, which stood near the site of the present Grocers hall. In 1439, it was occupied by Robert Lorge, mayor, who kept his mayoralty in this house; Sir Hugh Clapton did the same in 1492; and after these tenants it was degraded into a tavern, distinguished by the sign of the Windmill.

GROCERS
HALL.

OF SIR JOHN
CUTLER.

THE chapel, or church, was bought by the Grocers company, in 1411, from Fitzwalter, for three hundred and twenty marks;* who here layed the foundation of the present hall, a noble room, with a gothic front, and bow window. Here, to my great surprize, I met again with Sir John Cutler, grocer, in marble and on canvas. In the first he is represented standing, in a flowing wig waved rather than curled, a laced cravat, and a furred gown with the folds not ungraceful: except where the dress is inimical to the sculptor's art, it may be called a good performance. By his portrait we may learn that this worthy wore a black wig, and was a good-looking man. He was created a baronet November 12th, 1660; so that he certainly had some claim of gratitude on the restored monarch. He died in 1693. His kinsman and executor, Edmund Boulter, Esq; expended 7,666*l.* on his funeral expences.† He is spoken of as a benefactor, and as having rebuilt the great parlour, and over it the court room, which were consumed in the fire of 1666. He served as master of the company in 1652 and 1653, in 1688, and again a fourth time. The anecdote of his bounty to the College of Physicians, might have led one to suppose that the Grocers had not met with more liberal treatment. But by the honors of the statue, and the portrait, he seems to have gained here a degree of popularity. How far the character given of him by Mr. Pope may rest unimpeached, must remain a subject of further inquiry :

Thy life more wretched, Cutler, was confess'd,
 Arise and tell me was thy death more bless'd?
Cutler saw tenants break, and houses fall ;
 For very want he could not build a wall.
 His only daughter in a stranger's power ; *
 For very want he could not pay a dower.
 A few grey hairs his rev'rend temples crown'd,
 'Twas very want that sold them for ten pound.†
 What e'en denied a cordial at his end,
 Banish'd the doctor, and expell'd the friend ?
 What but a want, which you perhaps think mad,
 Yet numbers feel, the want of what he had.

THIS company follows the Mercers ; they were

* He had two daughters ; one married to Sir William Portman, bart. the other to John * Robartes, earl of Radnor ; both married without his consent. The first died before him. J. C. Brooke, esq ; Somerset-herald.—The same authority tells me he had his grant of arms just before his death, wherein he is styled, " of the city of Westminster."

originally called Pepperers, from their dealing so greatly in pepper: but in 1345 they were incorporated by the name of Grocers,* either because they sold things by the gross, or dealt in grossi or figs. But from the beginning they trafficked in all the good things which the trade does to this day.

In this hall sate the famous committee of the parlement of 1641, which was to settle the reform of the nation, and conduct the inflammatory business of the times. Lord Clarendon gives the motives of fixing on this place: such as pretended fears for the safety of the friends of liberty; and the real and reasonable dread of the moderate men, who had been pointed out to the mob as enemies to their country—as the De Witts were by the patriots of Holland, and de Foulon and Berthier by those of France. The one gave security to the popular leaders, and the other lessened the minority, by frightening from attendance numbers who might have been of use to the royal cause.

RINGED-
HALL.

In Queen-street, on the south side of Cheapside, stood Ringed-hall, the house of the earls of Cornwall, given by them, in Edward III's time, to the abbot of Beaulieu, near Oxford. Henry VIII. gave it to Morgan Philip, alias Wolfe. Near it

IPRES-INN. was Ipres-inn, built by William of Ipres, in king Stephen's time, and continued in the same family in 1377.

* Supra, 477.

I FORGOT Bucklesbury, a street which opens on the south side of Cheapside, a little to the west of the Grocers hall. It took its name from one Buckle, who had in it a large manor-house of stone. This man lost his life in a strange way. Near his house stood an old tower built by Edward I. called the Cornets tower, possibly a watch-tower, from the summit of which signals might have been given by blowing a horn. Here that monarch kept his exchange. About the year 1358 he gave it to St. Stephen's chapel, Westminster. This Buckle intended to pull it down, and to have built a handsome house of wood; or, according to the expression of the times, a goodly frame of timber: but in greedily demolishing this tower, a stone fell on him, and crushed him to death; and another person, who married his widow, set up the new-prepared frame of timber, and finished the work.

I HAVE heard that Bucklesbury was, in the reign of king William, noted for the great resort of ladies of fashion, to purchase tea, fans, and other Indian goods. King William, in some of his letters, appears to be angry with his queen for visiting these shops; which, it should seem, by the following lines of Prior, were sometimes perverted to places of intrigue; for, speaking of Hans Carvel's wife, says the poet,

ST. STEPHEN WALBROOK.

She first of all the town was told,
 Where newest Indian things were sold ;
 So in a morning, without boddice,
 Slipt sometimes out to Mrs. Thody's,
 To cheapen tea, or buy a skreen :
 What else could so much virtue mean ?

IN the time of queen Elizabeth, this street was inhabited by chemists, druggists, and apothecaries. Mouffett, in his treatise on foods, calls on them to decide, whether sweet smells correct pestilent air: and adds, that Bucklesbury being replete with physic, drugs, and spicery, and being perfumed, in the time of the plague, with the pounding of spices, melting of gum, and making perfumes for others, escaped that great plague whereof such multitudes died, that scarcely any house was left unvisited.

THE MAN-SION-HOUSE.

ON the same side of the way is the Mansion-house, “darned, I may say, to everlasting fame.”*

ST. STEPHEN
 WALBROOK.

The sight is relieved amply by another building behind it, St. Stephen's, Walbrook, a small church, the chef d'œuvre of Sir Christopher Wren, of most exquisite beauty. “ Perhaps Italy itself, (says a “ judicious writer) can produce no modern building that can vie with this in taste and proportion: there is not a beauty, which the plan “ would admit of, that is not to be found here in

* Critical Review, &c. 36, 37.

“ the greatest perfection: and foreigners, very “ justly, call our taste in question, for understand“ ing the graces no better, and allowing it no higher “ degree of fame.”*

OVER the altar is a beautiful picture of the martyrdom of St. Stephen, by Mr. West. The character of the saint is finely expressed in his angelic countenance, resigned to his fate, and full of sure and certain hope. I looked to no purpose for the statue erected, DIVÆ MAC-AULÆ, by her doating admirer, a former rector; which a successor of his has most profanely pulled down.

THE Mansion-house, and many adjacent buildings, stand on the site of Stocks-market; which took its name from a pair of stocks for the punishment of offenders, erected in an open place near this spot, as early as the year 1281. This was the great market of the city during many centuries. In it stood the famous equestrian statue, erected in honor of Charles II. by his most loyal subject Sir Robert Viner, lord mayor. Fortunately his lordship discovered one (made at Leghorn) of John Sobieski, king of Poland, trampling on a Turk. The good knight caused some alterations to be made, and christened the Polish monarch by the name of Charles, and bestowed on the turbaned Turk that of Oliver Cromwell; and thus, new named, it arose on this spot in honor of his convivial monarch. The statue was removed, in 1738, to make room for the Mansion-house. It remained many years afterward in an inn-yard : and in 1779 it was bestowed, by the common-council, on Robert Vyner, Esq; who removed it to grace his country seat.

THE opening before the Mansion-house divides into three important streets : Cornhill in the center ; the Bank of England, the old Threadneedle-street, on the north ; and Lombard-street on the south. I shall pursue these as far as the spots which I have already described, and give what remains worthy of notice. I shall take the middle way.

THE ROYAL
EXCHANGE.

THE Royal Exchange, that concourse of all nations of the world, rises before us with the full majesty of commerce. Whether we consider the grandeur of the edifice, or the vast concerns carried on within its walls, we are equally struck with its importance. But we are more astonished when we find that this expensive princely pile was the result of the munificence of a private citizen, SIR THOMAS GRESHAM. Let the pride of my country not be suppressed, when I have an opportunity of saying, that the original hint was given to him by a Welshman ; by Richard Clough, afterward knighted, originally his servant, and in the year 1561, by his merit and industry, advanced by Sir

Thomas to be his correspondent and agent in the then emporium of the world, Antwerp. Clough wrote to his master, to blame the citizens of London for neglecting so necessary a thing; bluntly saying, that they studied nothing else but their own private profit; that they were content to walk about in the rain, more like pedlars than merchants; and that there was no kind of people but had their place to transact business in, in other countries. Thus stimulated, Sir Thomas purchased some tenements on the site of the Royal Exchange; on June 7, 1566, laid the foundation, and, in November, 1567, completed what was then called the Bourse. In 1570, queen Elizabeth went in great state from her palace at Somerset-house, to make Sir Thomas a visit at his own house. After dinner she went to the Bourse, visited every part, and then, by sound of trumpet, dignified it with the title of the Royal Exchange. All the upper part was filled then, and even to this century, with shops; on the above occasion they were filled with the richest productions of the universe, to shew her majesty the prosperity of the commercial parts of her dominions. I cannot learn what the expence of this noble design was, only that the annual product of the rents to his widow was 751*l.* 5*s.* Hollar has left us some fine views of the original building, which perished in the great fire. It was rebuilt, in its present magnificent form, by the city and the company of Mercers,* at the expence of eighty thousand pounds ; which, for a considerable time, involved the undertakers in a large debt. It was completed in 1669 : on Sept. 28, of that year, it was opened by the lord mayor, Sir William Turner, who congratulated the merchants on the occasion. The following inscription does grateful honor to the original founder :

HOC GRESHAMII Peristyllium,
Gentium commerciis sacrum,
Flammis extinctum 1666,
Augustius e cinere resurrexit 1669,
Will^l Turnero, milite, prætore.

DURING the first century after its erection, the appearance of every people in the universe on their different walks, in their different dresses, was a most wonderful spectacle. At present it is lost by the dull and undistinguishing uniformity of habit.

THE statue of Sir Thomas Gresham is in one corner, in the dress of the times, executed by Cibber. Another, of that worthy citizen Sir John Barnard, graces another part. Never did patriot appear within these walls in a less questionable shape. I am informed, that, after this honor was paid to him, he never more appeared on the Royal Exchange. The rest are kings, which (as far as king Charles), with that of Sir Thomas, were chiefly executed by Gabriel Cibber; that of Charles II. in the center, was undertaken by Gibbons,* but done by Quillin, of Antwerp. Above stairs are the statues of Charles I. and II. and another of the illustrious founder, by John Bushnell, an artist of inferior merit, in the reign of William III. On the top of the tower, in front of the exchange, is a Grasshopper, the crest of Sir Thomas Gresham. The allusion to that, and the Dragon on Bow steeple, makes a line in that inexcusable performance of Dean Swift's, a profane imitation of the style of the BIBLE,† which dulness itself could execute, and which nothing but the most indefensible wantonness could have produced from a person of his profession, and of his all-acknowledged wit.

* Strype's Stow, i. book ii. 137.

I MUST direct the reader's attention to the beautiful gothic tower of St. Michael's, on the south side of Cornhill. At each corner is an angulated turret as high as the belfry, where they become fluted, and the capital ornamented with sculptures of human faces; from them they spire into very elegant pinnacles. The body of this church was burnt in the great fire. It was begun to be built in 1421;‡ but the church was of far greater antiquity; one appears to have existed in 1133.

CHURCH OF ST. MI-CHAEL.

* Anecdotes of Painting, iii. 136.

† Wonderful Prophecy, &c.

‡ Stow's Survey, i. 369.

This church had its pulpit-cross, like that of St. Paul's, built by Sir John Rudstone, mayor in 1528, who was interred in a vault beneath, in 1531. It may be added, that Robert Fabian, alderman, the celebrated historian, was buried in it in 1511, after passing the dignity of sheriff.

THE king had a royal residence in this street, which was afterward converted into a noted tavern, called the Pope's head. It was a vast house, and, in the time of Stow, distinguished by the arms of England, at that time three leopards passant, guardant, and two angels the supporters, cut on stone.*

LEADEN-
HALL.

AT the end of Cornhill is, as it were, a continuation of the street, by the name of that of Leaden-hall. It takes its name from a large plain building, inhabited, about the year 1309, by Sir Hugh Nevil, knight; in 1384 belonging to Humphry Bohun, earl of Hereford. In 1408 it became the property of the munificent Whittington, who presented it to the mayor and commonalty of London. In 1419, Sir Simon Eyre, citizen and draper, erected here a public granary, built with stone in its present form. This was to be what the French call a grenier d'abondance, to be always filled with corn, and designed as a preservative against famine. This intent was happily answered in distressful seasons. This and other of the city granaries seem at first to have been under the care of the mayors ; but in Henry VIII's time, regular surveyors were appointed. Sir Simon also built a chapel within the square ; this he intended to apply to the uses of a foundation for a warden, six secular priests, six clerks, and two choristers, besides three school-masters. For this purpose he left three thousand marks to the Drapers company to fulfil his intent. This was never executed : but in 1466 a fraternity of sixty priests, some of whom were to perform divine service every market-day, to such as frequented the market, was founded by three priests, *William Rouse, John Risby, and Thomas Ashby. The house was used for many other purposes ; for keeping the artillery and other arms of the city. Preparations for any triumph or pageantry in the city were made here. From its strength it was considered as the chief fortress within the city, in case of popular tumults ; and also as the place from which doles, largesses, or pious alms were to be distributed. Here, in 1546, while Henry VIII. lay putrefying in state, Heath, bishop of Worcester, his almoner, and others his ministers, distributed great sums of money, during twelve days, to the poor of the city, for the salvation of his soul. The same was done at Westminster ;* but I greatly fear his majesty was past ransom !

MARKET. THE market here is of great antiquity : but considerable as it is at present, it is far inferior to what it has been, on account of the numbers of other markets which have been established. Still it is the wonder of foreigners, who do not duly consider the carnivorous nation to which it belongs. The slaughter of horned cattle, for the use of the metropolis, is evinced by the multitudes of tanned hides exposed to sale in the great court of Leaden-hall, which is the present market for that article.

INDIA-HOUSE. The India-house stands a little farther to the east, but is not † worthy of the lords of Hindustan. This was built in 1726, on the spot once occupied by the house of Sir William Craven, mayor in 1610; a man of most extensive charity. His house was very large, the apartments capacious, and fit for any public concern.‡

AFRICAN-HOUSE. THE African-house stood in this street, east of Billeter-lane end. It had been the mansion of Sir Nicholas Throgmorton.

street, is supposed to have been interred the celebrated Holbein, who died of the plague in 1554, at the duke of Norfolk's, in the priory of Christchurch, near Aldgate. I must also mention it on another account, for its being the stage on which the imprudent, well-meaning Laud acted a most superstitious part in its consecration, on January 16, 1630-31. He added new force to the discontents and rage of the times, by attempting innovations in the ceremonies of the church, at a time when he ought, at least, to have left them in the state he found them. On the contrary, he pushed matters to extremities; by which, and by persisting in a fierce persecution of his opponents, he brought destruction on himself, and highly contributed to that of his royal master.

PRYNNE, whom every one must allow to have had sufficient cause of resentment against the archbishop, gives the relation with much acrimony, and much profane humor : *

(As first), “ When the bishop approached near
 “ the communion table, he bowed with his nose
 “ very near the ground some six or seven times ;
 “ then he came to one of the corners of the table,
 “ and there bowed himself three times ; then to “ the second, third, and fourth corners, bowing at “ each corner three times ; but when he came to “ the side of the table where the bread and wine

“ all this while were upon their knees by him, “ self came neare the bread, which was cut and “ laid in a fine napkin, and then he gently lifted “ up one of the corners of the said napkin, and “ peeping into it till he saw the bread, (like a boy “ that peeped into a bird’s nest in a bush), and “ presently clapped it down againe, and flew back

“ a step or two, and then bowed very low three “ times towards it and the table. When he be“ held the bread, then he came near and opened “ the napkin againe, and bowed as before ; then “ he laid his hand upon the gilt cup, which was “ full of wine, with a cover upon it ; so soon as “ he had pulled the cupp a little neerer to him,
“ he lett the cupp goe, flew backe, and bowed “ againe three times towards it ; then hee came “ neere againe, and lifting up the cover of the “ cupp, peeped into it ; and seeing the wine, he “ let fall the cover on it againe, and flew nimble “ backe, and bowed as before. After these, and “ many other apish, anticke gestures, he himselfe “ received, and then gave the sacrament to some “ principal men onely, they devoutly kneeling “ neere the table ; after which, more praiers being “ said, this scene and interlude ended.”

To the west of St. Catherine Cree, in the same street, stands the church of St. Andrew Undershaft, from the unfortunate shaft, or maypole, which on May 1st, 1517, gave rise to the insurrection of the apprentices, and the plundering of foreigners in the city, whence it got the name of Evil May-day.*

From that time it was hung on a range of hooks over the doors of a long row of neighboring houses. In the third of Edward VI, when the plague of fanaticism began to scandalize the promoters of the Reformed religion, an ignorant wretch, called Sir Stephen, curate of St. Catherine Cree, began to preach against this maypole, (notwithstanding it had hung in peace ever since the Evil May-day), as an idol, by naming the church of St. Andrew, with the addition of Shaft. This inflamed his audience so greatly, that, after eating a hearty dinner to strengthen themselves, the owners of each house over which the shaft hung, with the assistance of others, sawed off as much of it as hung over his premises: each took his share, and committed to the flames the tremendous idol. This Sir Stephen, scorning the use of the sober pulpit, sometimes mounted on a tomb, with his back to the altar, to pour out his nonsensical rhapsodies; at other times, he climbed into a lofty elm in the church-yard, and, bestriding a bough, delivered out his cant with double effect, merely by reason of the novelty of his situation.*

IN the church of St. Andrew Undershaft was interred the faithful and able historian of the city,

JOHN STOW. John Stow. He died in 1605, aged 80 ; and, to the shame of his time, in much poverty. His monument is still in being, a well-executed figure, sitting at a desk, in a furred gown, and writing. The figure is said to be made of terra cotta, or burnt earth, painted ; a common practice in those days : possibly somewhat similar to the artificial stone of our time.

IN Lime-street, the northern end of which opens into that of Leadenhall, stood the house and chapel of the lord Nevil ; and after him, of the accomplished Sir Simon de Burley, and of his brother Sir John. In the time of Stow, it was partly taken down, and newly fronted with timber, by Hugh Offley, alderman. Finally, not far from hence, toward the end of the adjacent street of St. Mary-Ax, stood the mansion of Richard Vere, earl of Oxford, who inhabited it in the beginning of the reign of Henry V ; and, drawn from hence in his old age to attend his valiant master to the French wars, died in France in 1415.† It was afterward Sir Robert Wingfield's, who sold it to Sir Edward Coke.

IN this street stood, in the reign of Edward I, a house called the King's Artiree, where now is Queen's-square-passage.

IN the same street, also, was the house of the noble family of Bassets, a large pile with several courts and gardens, which afterward became the property of the abbot of Bury, and was called Bevis Mark.

THE second street which opens into Cheapside, or rather the Poultry, is Threadneedle or more properly Three-needle Street. That noble building, the Bank of England, fills one side of the space. The centre, and the building behind, were founded in the year 1733; the architect, George Sampson. Before that time the business was carried on in Grocers Hall. The front is a sort of vestibule; the base rustic, the ornamental columns above, Ionic. Within is a court leading to a second elegant building, which contains a hall and offices, where the debt of above two hundred and fifty millions is punctually discharged.* Of late years two wings of uncommon elegance, designed by Sir Robert Taylor, have been added, at the expense of a few houses, and of the church of St. Christopher's le Stocks. The demolition of the last occasioned as much injury to the memorials Much of my kindred dust* was violated; among others, those of the Houblon family, sprung from Peter Houblon, of a respectable house at Lisle in Flanders, who was driven to seek refuge in England from the rage of persecution under the Duc d' Atoa, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. About the same time fled to our sanctuary John Houblon and Guillaume Lethiculier. The first is found to have lent, i. e. given, to her Majesty, in the perilous year 1588, a hundred pounds.† His son James flourished in wealth and reputation, and was eminent for his plainness and piety. He was buried in the church of St. Mary Woolnoth; but, wanting a monument, the following epitaph was composed for him by Samuel Pepys, esq; secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II.:

JACOBUS HOUBLON,

* The remains of my worthy sister Sarah, and my ever respected mother, were removed on this occasion.

† The loan from the city was only 4,900*l.*

HIS sons, Sir John Houblon, and Sir James Houblon, knights, and aldermen, rose to great wealth. From the latter sprung the respectable family of the Houblons of Hallingbury, in Essex. Sir James represented his native city. Sir John, my great grandfather by my mother's side, left six daughters: Arabella, the eldest, married to Richard Mytton, esq; of Halston, my maternal grandfather; the second to Mr. Denny, a respectable merchant in the city; the four younger died unmarried. Sir John Houblon was of the Grocers company, was elected alderman of Cornhill-ward, September 17th, 1689; and lord mayor, September 29th, 1695. He was interred in this church January 18th, 1711-12. He was at the same time lord mayor of London, a lord of the admiralty, and the first governor of the bank of England. His mansion stood on the site of the bank; the noblest monument he could have.

I HAVE a fine mezzotinto of him by Robert Williams. It is from a private plate from a three-quarter piece by Closterman. Sir John is dressed in the robes of office, his mace, sword and chain. In the 68th year of his age.

It would be injustice not to give the name of the projector of that national glory the Bank of England. It was the happy thought of Mr. James Paterson, of the kingdom of Scotland. This Palladium of our country was, in 1780, saved from the fury of an infamous mob by the virtue of its citizens, who formed suddenly a volunteer company, and over-awed the miscreants; while the chief magistrate skulked trembling in his Mansion-house, and left his important charge to its fate. I cannot wonder at the timidity of a peaceful magistrate, when the principle of self-preservation appeared so strong in the ministry of the day. It was the spirit of majesty itself that first dictated the means of putting a stop to the outrages; which, if exerted at first by its servants, would have been true mercy!

MERCHANT-TAYLORS
HALL.

IN Threadneedle-street appears the origin of its name, in Merchant-Taylors hall; at the period in which they were called Taylors, and Linen-armourers, under which title they were incorporated in the year 1480; and by Henry VII. in 1503; by that of the men of the art and mystery of Merchant-taylors, of the fraternity of St. John the Baptist. They were seventh in rank of the great companies. Multitudes of eminent men were envious of being admitted into it: seven kings, one queen, seventeen princes and dukes, two dutchesses, one archbishop, one and thirty earls, five countesses, one viscount, twenty-four bishops, sixty-six barons, two ladies, seven abbots, seven priors, and one sub-prior, besides esquires innumerable, graced the long roll of freemen of this company.*

* Strype's Stow, i.

AMONG the pictures in this hall, or its different apartments, is one of Henry VII. presenting the charter of incorporation to the company. This was painted and presented by Mr. Nathaniel Clarkson, of Islington, a member of the court of assistants. The king is attended by William Warham, archbishop of Canterbury, and lord high chancellor of England. He went through the various offices, now allotted to laymen, with great abilities; was appointed master of the rolls in 1486; keeper of the great seal in 1502; and lord chancellor in 1503; and in the following year was advanced to the see of Canterbury. He was in high favor with Henry VII.; but on the accession of Henry VIII. was soon supplanted by Wolsey, and experienced his greatest insolence. The good primate enjoyed his dignity nearly twenty-eight years, with great munificence and honor; and died in 1532.*

NEXT is the portrait of Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, an able statesman, who was much employed by Henry VII. at home and abroad; and continued for some time favored by his son. He first introduced Wolsey to court: but soon experienced his ingratitude. Unable to bear his insolence, he, like Warham, retired from business. In his old age, when struck with blindness, the cardinal meanly hoped to prevail on him to resign his bishoprick, to which the good prelate returned a spirited reply. He lived to a great age, and died in 1528, after worthily governing the see twenty-seven years. Another of Henry's courtiers is on his left hand; Willoughby lord Brooke, steward of the household, with his white wand: and in the fore-ground, the clerk exhibiting a roll of the list of the royal freemen of the company.

FOR the many good deeds of Sir Thomas Row, merchant-taylor, his portrait must not be passed by. He is dressed in a bonnet, ruff, and red gown. He first established a substantial standing watch in the city, when he was lord mayor, in 1569. He built a convenient room, near St. Paul's Cross, for a certain number of the auditors to hear the preacher at their ease. He inclosed a piece of ground near Bethlem, for the burial-place of such parishes as wanted church-yards: besides doing numberless acts of charity, which rendered his memory sweet to posterity. He was buried at Hackney, September 2d, 1570; and has an epitaph in verse, quite in the simple style of the times.*

SIR THOMAS
WHITE.

THE portrait of the illustrious Sir Thomas White, honors this hall, dressed in a red gown. He was

* The epitaph calls him a merchant-venturer.—Steyne's Stow, ii. app. 127.—See more in vol. i. book i. 227, 264.—vol. ii. book v. 135—and Stow's Survey, 319.

of this fraternity, but possibly not of the profession ; for numbers of opulent merchants listed under the banners of this company. It was far from being confined to the trade. No one of his time rivalled him in the love of literature, charity, and true piety. In the glorious roll of charities, belonging to this company, he appears with distinguished credit. I refer to that for his good deeds, and those of his brethren.* Sir Thomas bought the Benedictine College at Oxford, then called Glocester-hall,† and founded it by that name. It has since been advanced into a college, by the name of Worcester. He was the sole founder of St. John's College,‡ on whom he bestowed his hall. He was discontented till he could find a place with two elms growing together, near which he might found this seat of learning. He met with his wish, and accomplished the great design. Within my memory, majestic elms graced the street before this, and the neighboring college. The scene was truly academic, walks worthy of the contemplative schools of antient days. But alas ! in the midst of numberless modern elegancies, in this single instance,

And by the magic line, every venerable tree fell prostrate. I refer, as above, to the list of the noble charities of this good man. He was born at Woodoakes, in Hertfordshire; entered on the reward of his excellent deeds in 1566, aged 72; and met with an honorable tomb within the walls of his great foundation.*

THIS magnificent foundation of his, was intended for the reception of the scholars brought up in Merchant-tailors school: there being forty-six fellowships designed for the elevés of that school, which was founded by the company, in 1561. It is a handsome plain building, in Sus-folk-lane, Thames-street, endowed in the most ample manner: about three hundred boys are instructed there, of which one hundred are at the expence of the company; among them many have risen to the highest dignities in the church. It was first kept in a house belonging to the Staf-fords, dukes of Buckingham, called the Manor of the Rose. It was bought by this respectable company.† Richard Hill, then master of the company, contributed five hundred pounds. The house being destroyed in the great fire, the present buildings were erected on its site.

THIS company, it is said, have upwards of three thousand pounds a year to dispose of in charity, the bequest of several pious members of this respectable fraternity.

LET me enumerate the men of valor, and of literature, who have practised the original profession of this company. Sir John Hawkwood, usually styled Joannes Acutus, from the sharpness of his sword, or his needle, leads the van. The arch Fuller says, he turned his needle into a sword, and his thimble into a shield. He was born in the parish of Heddingham Sibil, in Essex,* the son of a tanner, and in due time was bound apprentice to a taylor in this city; was pressed for a soldier, and by his spirit rose to the highest commands in foreign parts. He first served under Edward III. and received from that monarch the honor of knighthood. By the extraordinary proofs of valor he shewed at the battle of Poictiers, he gained the esteem of his heroic general the Black Prince. On the peace between England and France, he, with several other English soldiers of fortune, associated himself with those brave banditti, known by the name of les grandes compagnies, Tard-Venus, and Malendrins. After carrying terror through certain parts of France by their dreadful ravages, he persuaded five thousand horsemen, and about fifteen hundred foot, mostly English, to follow him to assist the marquis of Montserrat, against Galeazzo, duke of Milan. After performing the most signal services for the marquis, he deserted him for the duke of Milan; was equally successful under his new master: and was rewarded by being married to Domitia, natural daughter to Barnabas, brother to the duke, with whom he received a great fortune. By her he had a son named John, born in Italy; who was naturalized in 1406, in the reign of *Henry IV. Notwithstanding this, he quitted the service of the Milanese, and drew his sword in the cause of their enemies the Florentines. He fought against the Pisans for the Florentines, and for the Pisans against the Florentines: but victory attended him on whichever side he took. For a time he enlisted under the pope Gregory XII. and recovered for his holiness the revolted places in Provence. I find him also employed, in 1383, by Edward III. on the cruel service of extirpating the heretics in Provence, and Forqualquier.† I have little doubt but that his sword, devoted to every call, performed its part to the satisfaction of his employer. He finished his days in the pay of the Florentines, and died, full of years and glory, at Florence, in 1394, where he was interred in the cathedral by order of the state, and his figure, on horseback, painted al fresco on the walls, by the celebrated Paulo Uccelli, is still to be seen. Beneath is this inscription, "JOHANNES ACUTUS, "eques Britannicus, ætatis suæ cautissimus et "rei militaris peritissimus, habitus est. PAULI "UCCELLI OPUS."*—It is engraven among the works of the Society of Antiquaries, with the date of 1436, which was a posthumous addition.

His native place, Heddingham, thought itself so honored by producing so great a man, that, by the assistance of his friends and executors, it erected to his memory, in the parish church, a monument, or cenotaph, which I believe still exists; for Mr. Morant, i. 288, speaks of his effigies, and that of two females lying by him; from which it may be supposed he was twice married. As he probably had no other arms than the needle and thimble, on the Florentine monument is given on his shield, allusive to his name, the device of Hawks flying through a wood.

SIR Ralph Blackwell was said to be his fellow-apprentice, and to have been knighted for his valor by Edward III. But he followed his trade, married his master's daughter, and, as we have said before, founded the hall which bears his name.†

SIR RALPH BLACKWELL.

JOHN SPEED was a Cheshire taylor, and free of this company. His merit as a British historian and antiquary is indisputable. The plans he has left us (now invaluable) of our antient castles, and of our cities, shew equal skill and industry. Nor must we be silent concerning his geographical labors, which, considering the confined knowledge of the times, are far from being despicable.

JOHN STOW. THE famous London antiquary, John Stow, born in London about the year 1525, ought to have the lead among those of our capital: he likewise was a taylor. There is not one who has followed him with equal steps, or who is not obliged to his black letter labors. In his industrious and long life (for he lived till the year 1605) he made vast collections, as well for the history and topography of his native city, as for the history of England. Numbers of facts, in the interesting period in which he lived, he speaks of from his own knowledge; or of earlier matters, from books long since lost. Multitudes of the houses of our antient nobility, existing in his time, are mentioned by him, and many of them in the most despicable parts of the town.

BENJAMIN ROBINS. THE late Benjamin Robins was the son of a taylor in Bath. He united the powers of the sword and the pen. His knowledge in tactics was equal to that of any person of his age: and by his compilation of lord Anson's voyage he proved himself not inferior in elegance of style.

ROBERT HILL. ROBERT HILL, taylor of Buckingham, was the first Hebraist of his time. This knowledge he acquired in the most depressing poverty; and amidst the cares of his profession, to maintain (for a most excellent man he was) his large family. The Reverend Mr. Spence did not think it beneath him to write his life, and point him out to the public as a meritorious object of charity; and to form a parallel between him and the celebrated Magliabecchi, librarian to the great duke of Tuscany.*

It was one of this meek profession, actuated by the religion of meekness, who first suggested the pious project of abolishing the slave trade. Thomas Woolman, a quaker, and taylor, of New Jersey, was first struck with the thought, that engaging in the traffic of the human species was incompatible with the spirit of the Christian religion. He published many tracts against this inhuman species of commerce; he argued against it in public and private: he made long journies for the sake of talking to individuals on the subject; and was careful, himself, not to countenance slavery, by the use of those conveniences which were provided by the labor of slaves. In the course of a visit to England, he went to York, in 1772, sickened of the small-pox, and died October 7th, in sure and certain hopes of that reward which Heaven will bestow on the sincere philanthropist.

THOMAS
WOOLMAN.

* This little tract was written in 1757; and is reprinted among the Fugitive Pieces, in the 2d volume. Hill was born in 1699.

SOUTH-SEA
HOUSE.

IN Threadneedle-street also stands the South-Sea house, the place in which the company did business, when it had any to transact. It was first established in 1711, for the purpose of an exclusive trade to the South-Seas; and for supplying Spanish America with negroes. In the year 1720, by the villainy of the directors, it became the most notorious bubble ever heard of in any kingdom. Imaginary fortunes of millions were grasped at: a luxury introduced as great as if these schemes had been realized. At length the deception was discovered, and the iniquitous contrivers detected and brought to punishment; many with infamy, by being expelled the house,* others suffered in their purses,† but none in a manner adequate to their crimes, which brought utter ruin on thousands.

AMONG the multitude of bubbles, which knaves, encouraged by the folly of the times, had the impudence to set up, were the following most laughable:

Insurance against Divorces.

A scheme to learn men to cast Nativities.

Making Deal-boards of Saw-dust.

Making Butter from Beech Trees.

A flying Engine, (now exemplified in Balloons.)

A sweet way of emptying Necessaries.

DRAPERS-
HALL.

I RETURN through Threadneedle-street into Broad-street. In Throgmorton-street, near its junction with Broad-street, stands Drapers-Hall. Thomas Cromwel, earl of Essex, built a magnificent house on its site: he shewed very little scruple in invading the rights of his neighbors to enlarge his domain. Stow mentions his own father as a sufferer; for the earl arbitrarily loosened from its place a house which stood in Stow's garden, placed it on rollers, and had it carried twenty-two feet farther off, without giving the least notice: and no one dared to complain.* The manner of removing this house, shews what miserable tenements a certain rank of people had, which could, like the houses in Moscow, be so easily conveyed from place to place. After Cromwel's fall, the house and gardens were bought by the Drapers Company. The house was destroyed in the great fire, but rebuilt, for the use of their company, in a magnificent manner. This was the farthest limit of the fire northward, as All-hallows church, in Fenchurch-street, was to the east.

In the hall, a very elegant room, is a portrait of the first mayor of London, Fitz-akwin, a half-length. I need not say a fictitious likeness. In his days, I doubt whether the artists equalled in any degree the worst of our modern sign-painters.

PORTRAITS.

At one end of the room is a large picture of Mary Stuart, with her hand upon her son James I. a little boy in a rich vest; her dress is black; her hair light-colored. I never saw her but in dark hair; perhaps she varied her locks. This could not be drawn from the life: for she never saw her son after he was a year old. These portraits are engraven by Bartolozzi.

Portraits of Sir Joseph Sheldon, mayor in 1677, and of Sir Robert Ckylton, mayor in 1680. Sir Robert was well deserving of this public proof of esteem: a great benefactor to Christ-church hospital, and again to that of St. Thomas in South-mark. He is finely painted, seated in a chair.

THE Drapers were incorporated in 1430. The art of weaving woollen cloth was only introduced in 1360, by the Dutch and Flemings: but, as it was long permitted to export our wool, and receive it again manufactured into cloth, the cloth-trade made little progress in England, till the reign of queen Elizabeth,* who may be said to have been the foundress of the wealthy loom, as of many other good things in this kingdom.

AUGUSTINES. ON the west side of the adjacent Broad-street stood the house of the Augustines, founded in 1253 by Humphry Bohun earl of Hereford, for friars eremites of that order. The church falling into ruin, was rebuilt by Humphry, one of his descendants, earl of Hereford, who was buried here in 1361. Numbers of persons of rank were also interred within its precincts, from the opinion of the peculiar sanctity with which these mendicants filled this earth. Here lay Edmund Guy de Meric, earl of St. Paul. This nobleman was sent over by Charles VI. of France, on a complimentary visit to Richard II. and his queen. He insinuated himself so greatly into the king's favor as to become a chief confidant: insomuch that, by the advice of St. Paul, he was guilty of that violent action, the murder of his factious uncle, the duke of Glocester.* Here also rests Lucie, wife of Edmund Holland, lord admiral, and one of the heirs and daughter of Barnaby lord of Milan. She left great legacies to the church, in particular to the canons of our lady de la Scala, at Milan.

RICHARD FITZALAN, the great earl of Arun- del, beheaded in 1397 on Tower-hill: John Vere, earl of Oxford, a strong friend to the house of Lancaster, beheaded by the cruel Edward, in 1463, at the same place, with his son and several others: numbers also of the barons who fell in Barnet-field, found here a place of interment. Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, victim, in 1521, to the pride of cardinal Wolsey, chose this holy ground; as did multitudes of others, recorded in the Survaie of John Stow.*

IN the successful cruizes made by the English, in the year 1545, about three hundred French ships were taken; Henry converted the conventual churches into so many warehouses for the cargoes. This and the Black-friars he filled with herrings and other fishes, and the Grey-friars were filled with wine.†

WINCHES-
TER-HOUSE.

AT the Dissolution, great part of the house, cloisters, and gardens were granted to William lord St. John, afterward marquis of Winchester, and lord treasurer. On the site he built Winchester-place, a magnificent house, where Winchester-street now stands. The west end of the church was in 1551 granted to John a Lasco for the use of the Germans, and other fugitive Protestants, and afterward to the Dutch as a preaching-place. Part also was converted into a glass-house for Venice glass, in which Venetians were employed in every branch of this manufacture. They were patronized by the duke of Buckingham. Howel, the celebrated author of the Letters, was steward to the manufacture, but was obliged to quit his office, not being able to endure the heat. He had been at Venice in 1621,† probably to pry into the secrets of the art, and to engage workmen.

This place was afterward converted into Pinner-hall, or the hall of the Company of Pin-makers.

PINNERS-
HALL.

THE other part the marquis reserved for the purpose of stowing corn, coal, and other things. His son sold the noble monuments of the dead, the paving-stones, and many other materials, which had cost thousands, for a hundred pounds, and converted the building into stables for his horses.* The steeple was standing in the year 1600. It was so beautiful, that the mayor and several respectable citizens petitioned the marquis that it might not be pulled down; but their petition was rejected, and this fine ornament of the city demolished.†

BEHIND this church, close to London-wall, THE PAPEY. stood the Papey, a fraternity of St. Charity and St. John the Evangelist, for Papeys, or poor infirm priests, founded in 1430 by certain chauntry priests. It was a numerous society, designed to relieve any of its members, who by lameness or illness were reduced to distress or poverty, whether they were brothers or sisters. The church of St. Augustine Papey belonged to this fraternity. These priests, the brotherhood of threescore priests of Leaden-hall, and the company of parish clerks, who were skilled in singing diriges and funeral offices, were accustomed to attend the solemn barials of the rich or great. An instance is given, in 1543, of their attending the funeral of Dame Jane Milbourn, widow of Sir John Milbourn, for which the sum of ten shillings was betowed on them by the will of the deceased.* This house became, after the Suppression, the habitation of Sir Francis Walsingham.

IN Winchester-street stood also a great house, called the Spanish ambassador's, which was occupied by Sir James Houlton, knight and alderman; and at the same period it was the residence of several of our most eminent merchants.

SIR THOMAS
GRESHAM'S
HOUSE.

To the east side of the same street, stood the house of our first of merchants, Sir Thomas Gresham; originally built with brick and timber, and fronting to Bishopsgate-street. By his will he appointed four lecturers in divinity, astronomy, music, and geometry, and three readers in civil law, physic, and rhetoric, each with a salary of fifty pounds a year, payable out of the rent issuing out of the Royal Exchange. This house was the place where the professors had their apartments, and where the lectures were to be read; which were begun in 1597, but they are now quite deserted. This arose in a great degree from the institution of the ROYAL SOCIETY: the meetings of which were for a considerable time held here.

THE origin of that respectable body was from the meeting of a few illustrious persons at the lodgings of doctor Wilkins, afterward bishop of Exeter, and others worthy of record, doctor Seth Ward, afterward bishop of Salisbury, Mr. BOYLE, Sir William Petty, and the doctors Wallis, Goddard, Willis, and Bathurst, Sir Christopher Wren, and a few more. In 1658, they assembled in Gresham college, by permission of the professors of the foundation of Sir Thomas Gresham; and on the Restoration were incorporated by royal charter. A most instructive and well-founded Museum was established here in 1677, by Henry Colwall, consisting of natural and artificial curiosities; collected with great expence and judgment. The society had then an advantage never possessed at any other time, the assistance of the great Mr. BOYLE, the most accomplished, the most learned, and most religious virtuoso, who pointed out the proper objects of their collection, and gave them the most finished instructions* for procuring them from every quarter of the globe. At that period there were, in both the Indies, persons capable of understanding, and pursuing with success, the plan laid down for them at home. It was the good fortune of the Museum to have, co-existent with its formation, a philosopher for its Curator, fully qualified to describe its various articles. Doctor Nehemiah Grew not only described, but illustrated every subject which required them, with the most learned and pertinent remarks. He published his Museum Regalis Societatis in 1681, and dedicated it to the founder, Mr. Colwall, at the expence of whom the plates were engraven. It is a work equal to the Museum Wormianum, or any other admired foreign performance of that age. Its defects arise only from the want of system, the misfortune of the time; for our RAY had not then cleared the rich ore of Natural History from the surrounding rubbish. About the year 1711, the Society removed from hence to Crane-court in Fleet-street. For many years the Museum was neglected. My respected friend, the honorable Daines Barrington, with the most disinterested zeal, undertook the restoration of it, as far as the ravages of time would permit. This he did in the most effectual manner; and enriched it with a number of new specimens, especially from our late colonies: it being his design to make it a repository of every thing relative to the natural history of Great Britain and its dependencies: a most noble plan, and worthy of being carried into full execution. By singular chance, Gresham college escaped the flames in 1666; but I believe very little of the original house remained: it having been mostly rebuilt in 1601, possibly after the original design: the arcades being adapted for the reception of the numbers of commercial and other followers of so universal a merchant as Sir Thomas Gresham.

THIS college has been pulled down within my memory; and the Excise-office, a building of most magnificent simplicity, has risen in its place. The payment into this office, from the fifth of January 1786, to the 5th of January 1787, was not less than five millions, five hundred and thirty-one thousand, one hundred and fourteen pounds, six shillings, and ten pence halfpenny.* Happy for us that our wealth keeps pace with our luxury!

EXCISE-
OFFICE.

THE house known by the name of Crosbie-house, stood on the opposite side of Bishopsgate-street, and was another magnificent structure, built by Sir John Crosbie, grocer and woolman, and sheriff in 1470, on ground leased to him by Alice Ashfield, prioress of St. Helen's. In this house Richard duke of Glocester lodged† after he had conveyed his nephews to the Tower, and was meditating the destruction of the poor innocents.

The hall, miscalled Richard III's chapel, is still very entire; a beautiful 'gothic building, with a bow-window on one side; the roof is of timber, and much to be admired. At present, this magnificent room is occupied by a packer.

HENRY VIII. made a grant of it to Anthonio Bonvica, a rich Italian merchant.* Henry was a great favorer of the merchants of this nation, for the sake of the "magnificent silks, velvets, tissues of gold, jewels, and other luxuries, (as he expresses it) for the pleasure of us, and of our dearest wyeff, the quene."† In the reign of Elizabeth, it seems to have been appropriated to foreign ambassadors: here was lodged the ambassador of France, and again the ambassador of Denmark.‡ The site of this house is still known by the name of Crosbie-square.

THE house of that great merchant Sir Paul Pindar stands in this street: it is easily known by the bow, and vast extent of windows along the front.§ Sir Paul was early distinguished by that frequent cause of promotion, the knowledge of languages. He was esteemed worth 236,000*l.* exclusive of bad debts, in the year 1639. His charities were very great: he expended nineteen thousand pounds in the repairs of St. Paul's cathedral.* He was ruined by his connections with his unfortunate monarch; and, if I remember rightly, underwent imprisonment for debt. It is said that Charles owed him, and the rest of the old commissioners of the customs, 300,000*l.*; for the security of which, in 1649, they offered the parlement 100,000*l.*; but the proposal was rejected.† He died August 22, 1650, aged 84. HELENA, the mother of Constantine the Great, and a canonized saint, had, a little to the east of Crosbie-square, a church dedicated to her in very early times. In 1210, a priory of Benedictine nuns was founded by a goldsmith, William Fitz-William, dedicated to the Holy Cross, and its inventress Helena, the piissima et venerabilis AUGUSTA. Its revenues, according to Dugdale, were 314*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Henry granted the site to Mr. Richard Cromwell, alias Williams; and on the nuns hall was built the Leather-sellers Hall. This company was incorporated in the reign of Richard II. They flourished greatly, in particular, in the time of queen Elizabeth, when they had considerable commerce in skins from Barbary and Russia, and made great profits from the exportation of the manufactured leather.

CHURCH OF ST. HELEN'S
THE GREAT.

TOMB OF SIR
T. GRESHAM.

NORTH-EAST of Threadneedle-street, stands the antient church known by the name of St. Helen's the Great; in it are numbers of curious tombs: they fortunately escaped the ravages of the great fire. That of the great benefactor to the city, Sir Thomas Gresham, claims the first notice: it is altar-fashioned, with a black slab on the top; the sides fluted, and of coloured marble. So great a name wanted not the proclamation of an epitaph, so it is entirely without inscription.

A most magnificent tomb of Sir William Pickering, who died in London, at Pickering-house, in 1754, aged 58. He lies recumbent, in rich gilt and painted armour, small ruff, short hair, trunk breeches; the mat he rests on is finely cut. He had served four princes: Henry VIII, in the field; Edward VI, as ambassador to France; queen Mary in Germany; and finally, queen Elizabeth. "Elizabeth, (says his epitaph) princeps omnium illustrissimæ summis officiis devotissimus." He is said to have aspired at the possession of her person.* Strype says that he was the finest gentleman of the age, for his worth in learning, arts, and warfare.†

SIR WILLIAM PICKERING.

A tomb of William Bond, who died in 1576, a merchant adventurer, and the most famous of his age for voyages by land and sea. He, his wife, and seven children, are represented kneeling. The lady is distinguished by her vast sleeves.

WILLIAM BOND.

THEIR son Martin took a military turn: he was captain in the camp at Tilbury, in 1588, and chief captain in the train-bands till his death. He is represented in armour, in his tent; soldiers are seen on the outside, and his servant waiting with his horse.

MARTIN BOND.

I OMIT many splendid monuments, which record that the possessors were good men and good

SIR JULIUS CÆSAR. citizens. That of Sir Julius Adelmær Cæsar, who died a superannuated master of the rolls in 1636, is very singular. His epitaph is cut on a black slab in form of a piece of parchment with a seal appendant, by which he gives his bond to Heaven, to resign his life willingly whenever it should please God to call him. In cujus rei testimonium manum meam et sigillum apposui.

RICHARD BANCROFT. IN a neat square mausoleum is lodged the embalmed corpse of Richard Bancroft, placed in a chest with a lid fastened only with hinges; over the face is a glass pane. This Bancroft is said to have been one of the lord mayor's officers, and a very rapacious person. To make atonement for his past life, he left his ill-gotten riches in trust to found and maintain an almshouse and school, and to keep his monument in repair. He left twenty shillings to the minister to preach annually a commemoration-sermon.* The alms-men and scholars attended, and his body was brought out for public inspection. But I think that this custom, as well as the sermon, have been of late years discontinued.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE. HERE is also another tomb, to commemorate Sir John Crosbie and his spouse: it is of an altar form; on it are recumbent two alabaster figures, one of the knight, beardless, with his hair cut short and round; over his shoulders is a robe, a fine collar round his neck, his body armed, and a griffin at his feet. By him lies his lady. Sir John had been a great benefactor to the city. He left five hundred marks to repair this church: his arms were expressed on the timber roof, stone-work, and glass. Towards the repair of London-wall, he gave a hundred pounds; and another towards building a stone tower on London-bridge: to the wardens of Grocers-hall, two large silver chased half gilt pots, weighing thirteen pounds five ounces, troy weight, to be used in the common hall: and contributed to all the prisons in a most liberal manner.*

* Northouk's Hist. of London, 557.

I now visit the third street which branches from the Poultry, that which took its name from the Lombards, the great money-changers and usurers of early times. They came out of Italy into our kingdom before the year 1274;† at length their extortions became so great, that Edward III. seized on their estates; perhaps the necessity of furnishing himself with money for his Flemish expedition, might have urged him to this step. They seem quickly to have repaired their loss; for complaint was soon after made against them, for persisting in their practices. They were so opulent in the days of Henry VI.

as to be able to furnish him with money, but they took care to get the customs mortgaged to them by way of security.* In this street they continued till the reign of queen Elizabeth; and to this day it is filled with the shops of numbers of eminent bankers.

THE shop of the great Sir Thomas Gresham stood in this street; it is now occupied by Messrs. Martin, bankers, who are still in possession of the original sign of that illustrious person, the Grasshopper. Were it mine, that honorable memorial of so great a predecessor should certainly be placed in the most ostentatious situation I could find.

POST-OFFICE.

THE Post-office, which gives wings to commerce, stands in Lombard-street. The office of chief postmaster was erected in 1551,† but we are not told how this branch of business was managed; however it was not regularly established till the year 1644, when Mr. Edmund Pridours, the inland postmaster, was supposed to collect about five thousand pounds a year.

In 1654, the parlement farmed the post-office to a Mr. Manly, for 100,000*l*. This farm included the postage of England, Scotland, and Ireland.*

* Anderson, i. 231.

† The Asterisks mark my authority as from Mr. Anderson; the rest are more doubtful, except from the words net income, in page 680.

ON the Restoration, a general Post-office was established in London, to be under the direction of a postmaster to be appointed by the king; and with powers to appoint post-houses in such parts of the country as were unprovided, both on the post and by-roads.

IN 1663, when peace and a settled government were restored, they were farmed to Daniel O'Neil, Esq. for 21,500*l*.*

IN 1674, they were raised to 43,000*l*.; and in 1685, the gross was estimated at 65,000*l*.*

At the Revolution the post amounted to 76,319*l*.

IN 1699, to 90,504*l*.*

IN 1710, to 111,461*l*. In 1715, the gross of the inland post came to 145,227*l*.

IN 1744, to 198,226*l*.; but the total of the inland and foreign offices was, in that year, 235,490*l*.

THE privilege of franking was first claimed by the commons in 1660, and allowed to both houses by the crown in the following year. The abuse must have been very great, it being asserted, that in 1763, the loss by that privilege amounted to 170,700*l.* I have seen in some private notes, that the gross of the year's revenue was 432,048*l.*; and from better authority, that the net income of 1763, the year previous to the first regulation of franking, was 97,833*l.*; which, in 1764, increased to 116,182*l.*

IN the year ending in August, 1784, the act revenue amounted to 159,625*l.* The act for the second regulation took place in that month; in the following year it increased to 196,513*l.* and in the succeeding to 261,409; and in the last (1788) by reason of our national prosperity, to 280,000*l.

BEFORE the great fire, on the site of the present office stood a much-frequented tavern. When it was destroyed by that calamity, the convivial Sir Robert Viner replaced it with a large house for his own habitation. Sir Robert, during his mayoralty, in 1675, was honored with the presence of his monarch, Charles II; his majesty was for retiring, after staying the usual time, but Sir Robert, filled with good liquor and loyalty, laid hold of the king, and swore, "Sir, you shall take 't'other bottle. The airy monarch looked kindly " at him over the shoulder, and with a smile,

IN digging a new sewer in Lombard-street, a few years ago, were discovered the remains of a Roman street, with numbers of coins, and several antique curiosities, some of great elegance. The beds through which the workmen sunk were four. The first consisted of factitious earth, about thirteen feet six inches thick, all accumulated since the desertion of the antient street : the second of brick, two feet thick, the ruins of the buildings : the third of ashes only, three inches : the fourth of Roman pavement, both common and tessellated, over which the coins and other antiquities were discovered. Beneath that was the original earth. This account was communicated to the Society of Antiquaries by Doctor Combe, Sir John Henneker, and Mr. John Jackson, of Clement’s-lane. The predominant articles were earthen-ware : and several were ornamented in the most elegant manner. A vase of red earth has on its surface a representation of a fight of men ; some on horseback, others on foot : or perhaps a shew of gladiators, as they all fought in pairs, and many of them naked : the combatants were armed with falchions; and small round shields, in the manner of the Thracians, the most esteemed of the gladiators. Others had spears, and others a kind of mace. A beautiful running foliage encompassed the bottom of this vessel. On the fragment of another were several figures. Among them appears Pan with his Pedum or crook; and near to him one of the lascivol satyri, both in beautiful skipping attitudes. On the same piece are two tripods; round each is a serpent regularly twisted, and bringing its head over a bowl which fills the top. These seem (by the serpent) to have been dedicated to Apollo,* who, as well as his son Æsculapius, presided over medicine. On the top of one of the tripods stands a man in full armour. Might not this vessel have been votive, made by order of a soldier restored to health by favor of the god; and to his active powers and enjoyment of rural pleasures, typified under the form of Pan and his nimble attendants? A plant extends along part of another compartment, possibly allusive to their medical virtues: and, to shew that Bacchus was not forgotten, beneath lies a Thyrus with a double head. The remains of the two bowls which I describe, exhibit beauties which make it evident that Rome did not want its WEDGWOOD.

* See similar in Monfaucon, tom. i. part ii. tab. lii.

ON another bowl was a free pattern of foliage. On others, or fragments, were objects of the chase, such as hares, part of a deer, and a boar, with human figures, dogs, and horses: all these pieces prettily ornamented. There were, besides, some beads, made of earthen-ware, of the same form as those called the ovum anguinum, and by the Welsh, glain naidr; and numbers of coins in gold, silver, and brass, of Claudius, Nero, Galba, and other emperors, down to Constantine. The more curious parts of this interesting discovery are engraven in the Archæologia, vol. viii and merit the attention of the curious.

IN the same street, towards Birchin-lane, stood the house of William de la Pole,* created in France, by Edward III. knight-banneret, with an allowance out of the customs of Hull for the support of his dignity.† He was a great merchant, and, being very opulent, used to supply the king's pecuniary wants. He was at the same time the King's merchant; an office that gave him the lucrative privilege of supplying his master with different sorts of merchandize, and also with money. The office seems to have been continued to later days, under another name: Henry VIII. had his King's factor, and Sir Thomas Gresham bore the title of the Queen's. Richard (William's elder brother, a merchant at Hull) had the same employ under Edward III. who calls him *diectus mercator Ricardus de la Pole Pincerna noster.

DE LA POLE
FAMILY.

FROM William sprung a numerous race of nobility, distinguished by their ambition and unfortunate ends. His son Michael was created earl of Suffolk, yet continued in his office of King's merchant, and lived in his father's house.† He at length became lord high chancellor; but, being accused of embezzling the public money, and divers other crimes, was banished the kingdom, and died at Paris in 1389, of a broken heart. His son Michael was restored, and died of a flux at the siege of Harfleur, in Sept. 1415; and in the very following month, his son and successor, another Michael, fell in the battle of Agincourt. His brother William succeeded, and was afterward created marquis, and then duke of Suffolk. He was the favorite of the spirited Margaret of Anjou. He had distinguished abilities, but by his insolence enraged the nobility so greatly, that, on an accusation of his being the cause of the loss of France, they banished him the kingdom. On his passage to Calais, he was seized by a vessel sent expressly to intercept him, and was brought into Dover, beheaded by the captain of the ship in the cock-boat, without ceremony, and his body flung upon the sands, where it was found by his chaplain, and buried at Wingfield in Suffolk. The nobility dreaded his return, therefore took this method to free themselves from so formidable an enemy.* John, his son, succeeded him. Finally, his son Edmund, who was condemned for a murder in the time of Henry VII, received his pardon; but in the following reign was, in 1513, executed for treason; his chief crime with that tyrant seems to have been his relationship to the house of York, his mother being sister to Edward IV. The venerable Margaret, countess of Salisbury, was barbarously brought to the block for the same reason; her son, cardinal Pole, would not have been spared, could Henry have gotten him into his power. Henry Pole, lord Montacute, suffered for corresponding with him: and thus ended this ill-fated race.

ABCHURCH-LANE, which falls into the south side of this street, is mentioned by Mr. Pope, as the residence of Mr. John Moore, author of the celebrated worm-powder, to whom the poet addresses himself in the following lines:

O learned friend of Abchurch-lane,
Who sett'st our entrails free!
Vain is thy art, thy powder vain,
Since worms must feed on thee.

* See the curious particulars in Sir John Fenn's Letters, i. 39, 48, truly stated. See also Shakspeare's Henry VI, part ii. act iv. scene 1. and the account of the prophecy in act i. scene 4.

TORTINGTON INN. IN Swithine's-lane, which runs between Lombard-street and Cannon-street, stood Tortington Inn, the house of the prior of Tortington in Suffolk. It was the house of the Veres earls of Oxford, in 1598, and called Oxford-place.

ADJACENT to the garden stood what Stow calls two other faire houses. In one dwelt Sir Richard Empson, in the other Edmund Dudley; the cruel instruments of oppression under the royal miser Henry VII. Each of them had a door into the garden, where they met and had private conferences; * probably to concert the best means of filling their master's pockets by the rigorous enforcement of penal statutes, or the revival of obsolete laws: or by assisting in any mean bargain which Henry chose to make.

DENMARK-HOUSE. IN Fenchurch-street, a continuation of the former, stood Denmark-house. In it was lodged the ambassador sent, in 1557, as Holinshed expresses it, from the emperor of Cathaie, Muscovia, and Russeland. This was in consequence of the new discovery of the White Sea by Chancellor: for till that time Russia was quite impervious by any other way. The merchants were well acquainted with the importance of the new commerce: they met him at Tottenham with all the splendor that was likely to make an impression on the mind of a Barbarian. They were dressed in velvet coats, and rich chains of gold, and bore all his expences. Lord Montacute, with the queen's pensioners, met him at Islington; and the lord mayor and aldermen, in scarlet robes, received him at Smithfield, and from thence rode with him to this house, then "Maister Dimmock's, in Fenchurch-street."* Our Russian company was formed three years previous to the arrival of this ambassador, but its commerce was carried on with redoubled success after the Russians were thus made acquainted with our wealth and power.

* Stow's Survvaie, 407.

IN the same street was Northumberland-place, the site of the house of Henry earl of Northumberland, towards the end of the reign of Henry VI. NORTHUMBERLAND-PLACE.

IRONMONGERS-HALL is a great ornament to this street; as it is an honor to its architect. It was built in 1748, and is the place of business and festivity of that great and opulent company. Maitland tells us, they have the happy ability of disposing of, annually, eighteen hundred pounds for charitable uses. IRONMONGERS-HALL.

IN this street is the Hudson's-bay House, the vast repository of the northern furs of America, which are lodged here till they are sold, and exported to various parts of the world, even to the distant China. In this hall is a vast pair of horns, HUDSON'S-BAY HOUSE.

of the Moose Deer, weighing fifty-six pounds ; and in another room, the picture of an Elk, the European Moose, killed in the presence of Charles XI. of Sweden, which weighed twelve hundred and twenty-nine pounds.

THE THAMES. I SHOULD speak with the prejudices of a true Englishman, were I to dignify the Thames with the title of the chief of rivers. I must qualify my patriotism with its just clame to that of first of island-rivers. In respect to our rival kingdom, it must yield the palm to the Garonne: We must not make the comparison of length of course; the contracted space of our island limits that species of grandeur; but there is no river, in any part of Europe, which can boast of more utility in bringing farther from the ocean the largest commercial ships; nor is there any which can bring the riches of the universe to their very capital. The ships of the Seine discharge themselves at Havre; those of the Loire reach no farther than Port-Lannai, far below its emporium, Nantes; and the Garonne conveys no farther than Pouillac the full-loaden ships: there they are obliged to be eased of part of their cargoes, before they can reach the opulent Bordeaux.

COURSE OF. THE Thames rises beneath Sapperson-hill, just within the borders of Glocestershire, a little to the south-west of Cirencester, which it instantly quits, and enters for a short space into the county of Wills, bends a little into it, and re-enters its parent province near Lechlade, where (by means of locks) it first becomes navigable, and, as is said, for barges of seventy tons. It here leaves Glocestershire, and becomes the whole southern boundary of Oxfordshire, or the northern of Berkshire, and from thence is the southern limit of Buckinghamshire. Boulter's lock, above Maidenhead, in the same county, is the last lock; from thence to the sea it requires no farther art to aid its navigation. At a small distance from Windsor-bridge it divides Berkshire from Buckinghamshire; and at a small distance above Staines-bridge it divides Middlesex from Surry. Just above Kingston it feels the last feeble efforts of a tide; from thence is a most important increase: just below London-bridge, eighteen feet; and at Deptford, twenty. The former, brings ships of three hundred and fifty tons, drawing sixteen feet water, to the Custom-house; the latter, those of a thousand tons, even the largest, drawing twenty-three feet, which import the treasures of India. This noble river continues fresh as low as Woolwich, and even there is brackish only at spring-tides. Thus at our capital it is perfectly pure, salubrious, and subservient to the accumulation of those vast articles of commerce, with which this stupendous city abounds.

TIDE.

THE whole course of the Thames, to its mouth, ITS LENGTH. is considerably above two hundred miles. I contract its length very considerably, in comparison of the usual estimation, for I limit its mouth to the spot between the west end of the isle of Grain, in Kent, and the eastern part of that of Canvey, in Essex. From those places to the Naze in the latter county, and the North Foreland in that of Kent (which have hitherto been considered as its entrance) it ceases to flow in a single channel ; it becomes a vast estuary filled with sandbanks, many of which appear above water at the recess of the tides.

ITS PROPER

THE whole course of the river is through a country abounding with every idea of opulence, fertility, and rural elegance : meadows rich in hay, or covered with numerous herds ; gentle risings, and hanging woods ; embellished with palaces, magnificent seats, or beautiful villas, a few the hereditary mansions of our antient gentry, but the greater part property transferred, by the effects of vice and dissipation, to the owners of honest wealth, acquired by commerce, or industrious professions, or the dear purchase of cankering rapine. Its course furnishes few sublime scenes, excepting the high chalky cliffs near Henley ; all its banks are replete with native softness, improved by art and the fullest cultivation.

I do not recollect that it flows in any part over a rocky channel ; its bottom is either gravelly or clayey, according to the nature of the soil through which it meanders. This gives growth to the abundance of weeds with which it is in many parts filled; and these prove the safety of multitudes of fishes, and preserve them from being extirpated by the unbridled ravages of the poachers. The Thames has, between its source and Woolwich, every species found in the British rivers, except the BURBOT, the LOCHE, the COBITIS TÆNIA, or SPINY LOCHE, of late years discovered in the river Trent, and the small species of SALMON, the SAMLET. The SALMON, and the SHAD, are fishes of passage; the first appears in the river about the middle of February, is in great estimation, and sells at a vast price; their capture is prohibited from the 24th of August to the 11th of November. The SHAD arrives the latter end of May, or beginning of June, and is a very coarse fish: it sometimes grows to the weight of eight pounds, but the usual size is from four to five. This is the fish which Du Hamel describes as the true Alose of the French;* but the fishermen of the Thames have another they call Allis, much smaller than the former, with a row of spots from the gills along the sides, just beneath the back, more or less in number: this the French call Le Feinte.† I sus-

FISH.

† Du Hamel, ii. 321. tab. i. fig. 5.—Bloch, ii. tab. xxx. gives the figure of the Feinte; but is of opinion that the spots vanish with age. For my part, I have not had opportunities of frequent exami-

pect that the name Allis is misapplied to this species, and that it ought to be applied to the great or common Shad, being an evident corruption from the French name Alose; is the same with that of the Severn, but is rarely taken here: but neither of them are admitted to good tables.

LESSER LAMP-PREY, ITS GREAT USE.

THE lesser Lamprey, the Petromyxon fluviatilis of LINNÆUS, is a small fish of great and national importance, and is taken in amazing quantities between Battersea Reach and Taplow Mills (a space of about fifty miles) and sold to the Dutch for the Cod and other fisheries; 450,000 have been sold in one season for that purpose; the price has been forty shillings the thousand: this year the Dutch have given three pounds, and the English from five to eight pounds; the former having prudently contracted for three years at a certain price. Formerly the Thames has furnished from a million to twelve hundred thousand annually.—An attempt

OF THE TUR-BOT FISHERY.

was lately made in parlement to fling the Turbot fishery entirely into British hands, by laying ten shillings a ton duty on every foreign vessel importing Turbots into Great Britain: but the plan was found to be derived from selfish motives, and even on national injustice: the far greater quantity of nation of these fishes, but I incline to think they are different, as the Feintes appear in spawn at the length of sixteen inches, which is their largest size.—The Feinte is probably the Twaite of the Severn. Vide Brit. Zool. iii. 463. edit. 1812. Ed.

Turbots being discovered to be taken on the coasts of Holland and Flanders.*

THE fish of the Thames which come as low as London, and beyond it as far as the water is fresh, are a few Roach, and Dace, Bleak in great plenty, and Eels extend far down the river; small Flounders are found as far as Fulham, brought up by the tides, and continue stationary. The Barbel is never seen below London-bridge.

SEVERAL of the smaller species of whales have been known to stray up the Thames; a kind of Grampus, with a high dorsal fin, has been taken within the mouth of the river. It proved the Spekhugger of Strom, Hist. Sondmoer, i. 309; the Delphinus orca of Fabricius. Faun. Groenl. p. 46. Its length was twenty-four feet. Mr. J. Hunter has given a good figure of it in Phil. Trans. vol. lxxvii. tab. xvi. *

ANOTHER, which is engraven by the same gentleman, in plate xvii. was of the length of eighteen feet, thick in proportion to its length, and very deep bellied. I think it a new species.

A SPECIES allied to the Delphinus, Delphis, or Dolphin, twenty-one feet long, was taken in 1783, above London-bridge. The nose is protracted and slender, like that of the Dolphin, but much shorter. It differs from the Bottle-nosed Whale of Mr. Dale, in several particulars. The nose does not turn up at the end; the body is slender, the dorsal fin placed near the tail; and, as Mr. Hunter observes, has a very specific mark, two very small pointed teeth in the fore part of the upper jaw. This is engraven in plate xx. of the same volume of the Transactions; and has furnished a second new species discovered by our great anatomist.*

* See Introduction to the Arctic Zoology, Ed. 2d. p. lxxix.

THE common porpoises frequently run up the Thames in numbers, and afford an eager diversion to the watermen.

I WILL conclude this account with the fine lines written by Sir John Denham on this our celebrated river: and in a manner worthy of the greatness of the subject:

MY eye descending from the hill surveys
Where THAMES among the wanton valleys strays;
THAMES, the most lov'd of all the Ocean's sons
By his old sire, to his embraces runs,
Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity,
Tho' with those streams he no resemblance hold,
Whose foam is amber, and their gravel gold,
His genuine and less guilty wealth t' explore,
Search not his bottom, but survey his shore;
O'er which he kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring;
Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
Like mothers which their infants overlay;
Nor with a sudden and impetuous wave,
Like profuse kings, resumes the wealth he gave:

* Two-toothed Cachalot. Brit. Zool. edit. 1812. vol. iii. 84. Ed.

No unexpected inundations spoil
The mower's hopes, nor mock the ploughman's toil;
But godlike his unwearied bounty flows,
First loves to do, then loves the good he does.
Nor are his blessings to his banks confin'd,
But free and common as the sea or wind,
When he to boast or to disperse his stores,
Full of the tributes of his grateful shores,
Visits the world, and in his flying tow'rs
Brings home to us, and makes both Indies ours;
Finds wealth where 'tis, bestows it where it wants,
Cities in deserts, woods in cities plants:
So that to us no thing, no place is strange,
While his fair bosom is the world's exchange.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme!
Tho' deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong, without rage; without o'erflowing, full.
Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose fame in thine, like lesser currents, lost.

SAD near the willowy Thames we stood,
And curs'd th' inhospitable flood.
Tears, such as Patriots weep, 'gan flow,
The silent eloquence of woe,
When Cambria rush'd into our mind,
And pity with just vengeance join'd;
Vengeance to injur'd Cambria due,
And pity, O ye Bards! to you.
Silent, neglected, and unstrung,
Our harps upon the willows hang,
That "softly sweet, in Cambrian measures,
" Us'd to sooth our souls to pleasures;"
When lo! th' insulting foe appears,
And bids us dry our useless tears.
"Resume your harps" (the Saxons cry)
"And change your grief to songs of joy;
"Such as old Taliessin sang,
"What time your native mountains rang
"With his rude strains, and all around,
"Seas, rivers, woods, return'd the sound."
What! shall the Saxons hear us sing?
With Cambrian strains your valleys ring?

No—let old Conwy cease to flow !
 Back to her source Sabrina go !
 Let huge Plinlimmon hide his head !
 Or let the tyrant strike me dead,
 If I attempt to sing a song,
 Unmindful of my country's wrong !—
 What ! shall an haughty king command
 A Cambrian hymn, in a strange land ?
 May my right hand first wither'd be,
 Or e'er I touch a string for thee,
 Proud monarch ! nay, may instant death
 Arrest my tongue, and stop my breath,
 If I attempt to sing a song,
 Unmindful of my country's wrong !

Thou God of vengeance ! dost thou sleep,
 When thy insulted Druids weep,
 The victors' jest, the Saxons' scorn,
 Unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn ?
 Bare thy red arm, thou God of ire,
 And set their hoasted Tower on fire !—
 Remember our inhuman foes,
 When the first Edward furious rose,
 And, like a whirlwind's rapid sway,
 Swept armies, cities, bards away !

High, on a rock, o'er Conwy's flood,
 The last surviving poet stood,
 And curs'd the tyrant as he pass'd,
 With cruel pomp, and murd'rous haste.
 What now avail our tuneful strains,
 'Midst savage taunts and biting chains ?
 Say, will the lark, imprison'd, sing
 So sweet, as when on tow'ring wing
 He wakes the songsters of the sky,
 And tunes his notes to liberty ?

Ah no! the Cambrian lyre no more Shall sweetly sound on Arvon's shore :
No more the SILVER HARP be won,
Ye Muses, by your favorite son ;
(Or I, ev'n I, by glory fir'd,
Had to the honor'd prize aspir'd.)
No more shall Mona's oaks be spar'd,
Nor Druids' circle be rever'd ;
On Conwy's banks, and Menai's streams,
The solitary bittern screams ;
Where Llewellyn kept his court,
Wolves and ill-omen'd birds resort :
There oft', at midnight's silent hour,
Near yon ivy-mantled tow'r,
By the glow-worm's yellow fire,
Tuning his romantic lyre,
Gray's pale spectre seems to sing—
" RUIN SEIZR THEE, RUTHLESS KING !"

cissimâ, præter nomen et famam, et immensos ruinarum aggeres, vix quicquam superesset.

Carolus secundus, Dei gratiâ, rex Magna Britannia, Fran-cia, et Hibernia, anno regni XVIII. et plerique Angliæ proceres, consumptâ incendio urbe penè universâ, eademque triennio spatio in ampliorem modum instauratâ, et non ut antè ligneis aut lutels, sed partim lateritiis, partim marmoreis ædificiis, et operibus, ita ornatâ, ut è suis ruinis pulcrior multo prodîisse videatur; auctis præterea ad immensam magnitudinem urbis pomœiis; ad æternam utriusque facti memoriâ, hic, ubi tantæ cladis prima emicuit flamma,

Monumentum posuere,

INSCRIPTION FOR THE MONUMENT.

Discat præsens et futura setas, nequa similis ingruat clades, tempestivis Numen placare votis: beneficium verò regis, et procerum, quorum liberalitate, præter ornatum, major etiam urbi accessit securitas, grata mente recognoscat.

O quantum tibi debet Augusta,

Tot nascentia templa, tot renata,

Tot spectacula!

Martial.

As Augustus said of Rome, lateritium invani, marmoream reliqui, so the rebuilder of London might as properly say, luteum et ligneum inveni, lateritium et lapideum reliqui.

Sæpe majori fortunæ locum fecit injuria: multa ceciderunt, ut altius surgerent, et in majus. Timagenes felicitati urbis inimicus aiebat, Roma sibi incendia ob hoc unum dolori esse, quod sciret meliora resurrectura, quam ariscent. (Seneca epist. 92.)

Mensura columnarum, apud antiquos, maximarum.

Tota columna imp. Antonini, Romæ, alta est palmos Romanos CCXXX diametros scapi continet palmos XVI. et IV.
pollices.

Tota columna imp. Trajani, Romæ, ab ejus imo usque ad
statuæ Sancti Petri verticem, alta est palmos Romanos

Increased in the Burials this Year, 722.

It is the opinion of Mr. Richardson, who has served the Parish Offices, that there are nearly as many buried from London, at different Burial Grounds, without as within the above Bills, unnoticed here.—Burying Grounds without the Bills, close to or in London:—Bunhill Fields—Lady Huntingdon's, Spa Fields—Tottenham-court Road.—Many more such, besides Marylebone and Pancras.

* There have been Executed in Middlesex and Surrey, 37; of which number (6 only) have been reported to be buried as such within the Bills of Mortality.
